MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

"APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.

"APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.

"CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.

"DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.

"DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.

"EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.

"EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.

"FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.

"NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.

"OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.

"REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.

"MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—Rights and Obligations in Respect of Water.

SECT. 1.—PROPERTY IN WATER.

1. General rule—Right of riparian owner.]—(1) A right to the use of a stream of water, in exclusion of the proprietors of land adjoining the stream, either above or below, cannot be acquired by appropriation, within the term of twenty years; nor can a proprietor above, diminish the quantity or injure the quality of water, which would otherwise descend; nor can any proprietor below, throw back the water, without his licence or grant.

(2) A licence or grant to take away a certain quantity of water at a particular place, will not warrant a party, to whom it is granted, in taking away the same quantity of water in a different place. A general licence is revocable, except at such places where it has been acted upon & expense incurred.

(3) The possessor of land, through which a natural stream runs, has a right to the advantage of that stream, flowing in its natural course, & to use it for any purposes of his own, not inconsistent with a similar right of the proprietors of the land above & below.—MASON v. HILL (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 1; 2 Nev. & M. 3. Necessity for appropriation—Flowing water.]—(1) Running water is originally publici juris, & an individual can only acquire a right to it by applying so much of it as he wants to a beneficial purpose, leaving the rest to others, who, if they acquire a right to it by subsequent appropriation, cannot lawfully be disturbed in the enjoyment of it.

(2) Where the gravamen of an action on the case for disturbing a watercourse was that deft. had erected a dam above pltf.'s premises, on the river L. & widened another dam, & thereby prevented the water from running in its usual course, & in its usual calm & smooth manner, to pltf.'s premises, & thereby the water ran in a different channel & with greater violence, & injured the banks & premises of pltf., but without alleging that he had sustained an injury from the want of a sufficient quantity of water; & the jury having negatived any injury to pltf. from the causes assigned, but being of opinion that deft. ought not to keep the water pent up in summer time:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to a verdict.—WILLIAMS v. MORLAND (1824), 2 B. & C. 910; 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 583; 2 L. J. O. S. K. B. 191; 107 E. R. 620.

4. —— ——.]—(1) Flowing water is publici juris. The person first appropriating it, has the exclusive right, in derogation of the primitive right of the public; if he abandon the appropriation, it becomes again publici juris.

(2) Case will not lie, for lowering the bank of a stream, & erecting a weir, thereby diverting the flow of water from pltf.'s mill, where the place cut down, etc., was the freehold of deft., who at the time had a parol licence, which was afterwards revoked.—LIGGINS v. INGE (1831), 7 Bing. 682; 5 Moo. & P. 712; 9 L. 7. —— Percolating water.]—Pltf. & deft. were adjoining landowners, & had each a deep well on his own land, pltf.'s land being at a lower level than deft.'s. Deft. turned sewage from his house into his well, & thus polluted the water that percolated underground from deft.'s to pltf.'s land, & consequently the water, which came into pltf.'s well from such percolating water when he used his well by pumping, came adulterated with the sewage from deft.'s well:—Held: pltf. had a right of action against deft. for so polluting the source of supply, although until pltf. had appropriated it he had no property in the percolating water under his land, & although he appropriated such water by the artificial means of pumping.—BALLARD v. TOMLINSON (1885), 29 Ch. SECT. 2.—CREATION OF PROPRIETARY INTERESTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 62 (1).

10. Creation by statute.]—(1) By a public Act, certain persons were incorporated, with the usual powers, for the purpose of making the river Medway & streams thereinto flowing navigable, & it was amongst other things enacted that "the river or streams so to be made navigable, & all lands, tenements, & hereditaments to be by them, the co., made use of for the benefit of the navigation by virtue of a former Act & that Act, should be & were thereby vested in the co., their successors, heirs, & assigns for ever." Defts. erected works on the banks of the river for the purpose of raising, & thereby raised, water from the river, for the supply of the county lunatic asylum & county gaol:—Held: that the Act created in the co. a property & interest in the water of the river which was interfered with by the abstraction of it for the purposes to which it was applied by defts., purposes more extensive than those for which a riparian proprietor, as such, could insist upon appropriating the stream as it passed by his land; & it was not necessary to the maintenance of the action that there should be actual damage to the navigation, inasmuch as the Legislature intended to give the co. such an interest in all the water of the river for the purposes of the navigation as was interfered with by the abstraction of any part thereof.

(2) Qu: whether or not the riparian proprietors could exercise for the benefit of the land adjoining the river the rights which ordinarily belong to such proprietors.—MEDWAY CO. v. ROMNEY (EARL) (1861), 9 C. B. N. S. 575; 30 L. J. C. P. 236; 4 L. T. 87; 25 J. P. 550; 7 Jur. N. S. 846; 9 W. R. 482; 142 E. R. 226.

11. Demise of water—By lessee—Effect of determination of head lease—On right to receive rent.]—Pltf. was occupier under a lease of a farm & mill. The mill was supplied with water which flowed along a natural watercourse through the farm. The works of deft. slate co. were contiguous to the farm; & defts. sought to utilise the flow of the watercourse for the slate works. Accordingly, in 1871, pltf. & defts. entered into an agreement by which pltf. gave permission to defts. to use the watercourse, troughs, & landers on the farm, & from time to time cleanse, scour, & keep same free for the passage of the water, & from time to time keep in repair or renew such watercourse, troughs, or landers, defts. having full liberty of ingress or egress at all times on to the farm. The parties further agreed that the agreement might be terminated at the expiration of three months' notice, to be given on either side. The rent reserved for the use of the water was £1 per week, which was afterwards increased to £3 per week.

PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

c. Water records, rights & privileges—Priority of record holders.]—Where there is not sufficient water in a stream to satisfy the number of inches granted to various record holders, the holder of a prior record is entitled to take water to the full amount thereof before the holder of a subsequent record can take any.—CAMPBELL v. BROWNLEE, 2 M. M. Cas. 571.—CAN.

In 1876 pltf.'s interest in the farm expired by effluxion of time, but he retained his occupation of the mill. The farm was subsequently leased by the freeholders to D. The position of the mill was lower down the stream or watercourse than the farm. Defts. continued to pay the rent down to Apr. 1885, when D. claimed to exclude them from that portion of the farm which was in his occupation. No notice was given by either party to the agreement to terminate the arrangement. Defts. then refused to pay any more rent to pltf. Pltf. brought his action to recover seven quarters' rent in arrear. The action was tried, & the point of law was reserved for further consideration :—Held : under the circumstances defts. were entitled to judgment, because though there had not been any regular notice to terminate the agreement between themselves & pltf., yet its operation was limited in point of time to the occupation of the farm by pltf., & on the determination of its occupancy by him his right to the rent for the use of the water ceased.—JONES v. DOROTHEA CO. 12. Whether grantee acquires rights of riparian owner—Grant of land abutting on river.]—(1) A riparian proprietor cannot keep the land abutting on a river, the possession of which gives him his water rights & at the same time, by granting a part of that land which does not abut on the river transfer those rights or any of them & thus create a right in gross by assigning a portion of his rights appurtenant.

(2) The rights which a riparian proprietor has with respect to the water are entirely derived from the possession of land abutting on the river. If he grants away any portion of his land so abutting, the grantee becomes a riparian proprietor & has similar rights ; but if he gives away a portion of his estate not abutting on the river, then the grantee of the land would have no water rights by virtue merely of his occupation, nor can he have them by express grant, except as against the grantor so as to sue other persons in his own name for an infringement of them.—STOCKPORT WATERWORKS CO. v. POTTER (1864), 3 H. & C. 300 ; 4 New Rep. 441 ; 10 L. An hospital was founded in 1617, & was endowed with lands which had belonged to the corpn. & there was a close connection between them. In 1653, in consideration of £1,400 part of a greater sum due from the corpn. of the town to the hospital, an estate in fee simple was granted by the corpn. to the hospital of one-fourth part of certain mills, & " of one-fourth of the leat or watercourse, running, coming, & going to all the mills " :—Held : only so much of the water as remained after the public purposes were satisfied could be applied by the corpn. to the use of the mills on the leat ; & one-fourth only of the surplus water of the leat passed by the grant of 1653.

The culvert, which carried off nearly all the water from the brook, commenced in some lands of deft. which were bounded by the brook, & then passed through farm B., where a portion of the water was drawn out of it by means of a small pipe, for the use of farm B. The rest of the water, namely, the larger portion, flowed on down the culvert, which, after traversing farm B., ended in other premises of deft., where the water was consumed. In Sept. 1856, the then owner of farms A. & B. conveyed farm B. in fee to deft., together with all waters & watercourses appertaining to the premises, or used, occupied or enjoyed with the same. He afterwards conveyed farm A. to pltf., with all waters & watercourses:—Held: as against the owner of farm A., the words of the conveyance of farm B. were sufficient to convey to deft. the right to the continuance of the culvert, & to the accustomed flow of water down it; & his right was not limited to the taking so much of the water as had heretofore been used for the purposes of farm B.—WARDLE v. BROCKLEHURST

23. Sale of mill—Whether water pipes pass—Pipes conveying water to mill.]—Deft., being the owner of a cotton mill or factory, & also of a small piece of land lying between it & a local canal, agreed to sell the factory to pltf. By Act, owners of land within 20 yards of the canal were authorised to draw water for the sole purpose of condensing steam. In 1808, the owners of the mill purchased the intermediate plot, & laid down pipes, & the canal water was used for the general purposes of the mill until 1857, but the legality of this use of the water was at various times disputed by the proprietors of the canal. At the date of the contract, all the machinery was removed from the mill, which was used solely as a warehouse. The contract was silent as to the right to the water; but pltf. alleged that he bought on the faith of having the water, while deft. alleged that he never intended to sell it. Deft. removed some of the underground pipes from the intermediate plot, & offered a conveyance with the usual general words. Pltf. filed a bill praying a mandatory injunction as to the pipes, & the specific performance of the agreement, including the right to the water. Semble: deft. was justified in removing the pipes from the plot not agreed to be sold, & was not bound to convey the mill with the pipes in statu quo.—BUTTERWORTH v. WALKER (1864), 11 L. 30. —— —— Land on which watercourse constructed.]—An artificial watercourse, constructed long before living memory, carried water from a weir in the river Arran at Dolgelly to a mill owned by deft., lower down the river. Pltf. owned land adjoining the watercourse between the intake & the mill. For more than one hundred years prior to 1908 the lands of pltf. & deft. belonged to a common owner, but the tenants had always been different. In 1908 pltf.'s land & the mill were conveyed to the predecessors in title of pltf., & deft., respectively; the conveyance to pltf.'s predecessor was silent as to any water rights; the conveyance to deft.'s predecessor contained a grant of the flow of water as used & enjoyed. There was evidence that the tenants of pltf. & his predecessors had always used the water from the watercourse for the purposes of their respective businesses of a fellmonger & a mason's yard, but the tenants of the mill had always kept it in repair, & stopped the water altogether when necessary for repairs & to some extent controlled the flow of water. Deft. had taken up the troughs which formed the original watercourse & substituted iron pipes from which pltf.'s tenants could get no water. There was a dispute whether pltf.'s land included the site of the watercourse:—Held: the land upon which the watercourses opposite pltf.'s land was constructed was comprised in the conveyance to pltf.—LEWIS v. MEREDITH, [1913] 1 Ch. 571; 82 L. In the lease in question the grant was of so much of the water as M. had been accustomed to have for the use of his mill, & there was no exception of the watercourse to the lessor, but only to the occupiers of the meadows below a right to enter & cleanse the watercourse, & to take the water for the use of their meadows, as theretofore accustomed:—Held: the watercourse excepted in the pattern lease, was the stream & flow of the water, & not the channel through which it flowed, & more was not demised by the lease in question than was granted by the pattern lease.—DOE d. R. agreed to purchase some land abutting on a watercourse in the district, & submitted plans for a factory which were approved subject to his culverting the watercourse. R. agreed to sell a strip of land abutting on the watercourse to O., & conveyed the strip to O. on the same day as the land was conveyed to him. The council, after the date of the conveyance, gave R. & O. notice to culvert the watercourse, but R. & O. ignored the notice & R. erected the factory. The council brought an action asking for a declaration that defts. were not entitled to commence, proceed with or maintain the factory without doing the works required by the council, & for an injunction restraining them from building:—Held: R.'s land did not abut on the watercourse, & O., whose land did abut on the watercourse, did not intend to build, & the action failed.—A.-G. v. ROWLEY BROTHERS & OXLEY (1910), 75 J. Deft. in working the minerals lying under the bed of the stream had caused a subsidence of the bed to the extent of 4 feet for some distance. In order to maintain the original level of the stream, deft. had constructed embankments on either side, & there was no actual diminution in the supply of water to pltf.'s mill. Upon bill for injunction, the ct. refused to make a hostile decree against deft., but by reason of the subsidence which had taken place in the bed of the stream, deft. was required to give an undertaking not to work the minerals in such a way as to obstruct or interfere with the flow & passage of the water to pltf.'s mill.—ELWELL v. CROWTHER (1862), 31 Beav. 163; 31 L. Any invasion of this right causing actual damage or calculated to found a claim which may ripen into an adverse right entitles the party injured to the intervention of the ct.

Resps. were riparian proprietors on one side of a stream. They & their predecessors had for sixty years used the water of the burn for the purpose of distillation, when applts., without any prescriptive right so to do, poured into the stream a large body of water which they pumped up from their mines, which water, if it had been left to the law of gravitation, would have never reached the stream. Resps. did not complain of the increased volume of the stream, but that the foreign water was of a character & quality different from that of the natural stream, & that it prejudically affected the water of the stream for distillery purposes:—Held: resps. were entitled to have applts. interdicted from discharging the mine water into the stream.

62. Right to lateral tributaries or feeders of main stream—Only where flowing in defined channel.]—(1) A landowner has a right to appropriate surface water which flows over his land in no definite channel, although the water is thereby prevented from reaching a watercourse which it previously supplied.

Where pltf.'s mill for more than fifty years, had been worked by the stream of a brook, which was supplied by the water of a pond filled by rain, a shallow well supplied by subterraneous water, a swamp, & a well formed by a stream springing out of the side of a hill, the waters of all which occasionally overflowed & ran down deft.'s land in no definite channel into the brook:—Held: pltf. had no right, as against deft. to the natural flow of any of the waters.

(2) The right of a riparian owner to the lateral tributaries or feeders of the main stream, applies to water flowing in a defined & natural channel or watercourse, & does not extend to water flowing over or soaking through land previous to its arrival at such watercourse.—BROADBENT v. RAMSBOTHAM (1856), 11 Exch. 602; 25 L. Declaration stated that A. & B. did grant licence for a term of years to C. to continue a channel open through the bank of a navigation, in order that the waste water might pass through the channel to the mills of C., the latter paying a certain annual sum therein mentioned. Breach, non-payment of that annual sum. Semble: upon the face of the declaration A. & B. must be considered as having the sole ownership of the navigation, & the sole power of granting this privilege; &, in that case, that the deed would operate as the grant of an interest in an hereditament, & that the assignee of the grantee would be liable to an action by the reversioner within 32 Hen. 8. By the deed produced in evidence, A. & B. were described as persons having the greatest proportion or share in the profits of the navigation:—Held: (1) by this deed it appeared, that the grantors had not the power of granting the privilege of which the deed as set out in the declaration purported to be a grant, & therefore that there was a variance; (2) the deed showed that the assignee of the grantee was not bound by the covenants, inasmuch as it appeared that the grantors had not any legal or equitable estate in the real hereditament which the deed set out in the declaration purported to grant.—PORTMORE (EARL) v. BUNN (1823), 1 B. & C. 694; 3 Dow. & Ry. 70. Course partly natural partly artificial—Demarcation not distinguishable—Whole course deemed natural.]—Pltf. was the owner of a farm supplied with water by a small watercourse originating in a natural spring on pltf.'s land, flowing, first, through pltf.'s land, next through deft.'s land, and then through pltf.'s land to pltf.'s house. For seventy years & upwards, prior to 1879, pltf. had almost exclusively enjoyed the watercourse. In 1879, however, deft., by means of a pipe, appropriated nearly all the water for the use of newly built houses. Pltf. claimed the exclusive use of the water, & alleged that the watercourse through deft.'s land was artificial, & constructed, at a time immemorial, for the sole benefit of pltf. & his predecessors:—Held: as no one could tell when the artificial part, if any, of the watercourse was made, the watercourse must be deemed to be a natural stream; or, if in part artificial, to have been made so as to give all the rights of a riparian proprietor to deft. & his predecessors in title.—ROBERTS v. RICHARDS (1881), 50 L. (2) The use of the water by a riparian proprietor for manufacturing purposes must be, as was laid down in Miner v. Gilmour, No. 79, post, such as not to interfere with the lawful use of the water by the other proprietors, above or below him, or to inflict on them a sensible injury.—BAILY & CO. v. CLARK, SON & MORLAND, [1902] 1 Ch. 649; 71 L. Right of owner—Ability to acquire natural rights of riparian owner.]—The owner of land not abutting on a river with the licence of a riparian owner took water from the river, & after using it for cooling certain apparatus returned it to the river unpolluted & undiminished:—Held: a lower riparian owner could not obtain an injunction against the landowner so taking the water, or against the riparian owner through whose land it was taken.

SUB-SECT. 3.—ABSTRACTION.

A. In General.

79. Right to reasonable user for ordinary purposes—Irrespective of effect on owners lower down.] —(1) Every riparian proprietor has a right to the reasonable use of the water flowing past his land, namely, for his domestic purposes & for his cattle, & this, without regard to the effect which such use may have, in case of a deficiency, upon proprietors lower down the stream. He has, also, the right to the use of the water for any other purpose, provided he does not thereby interfere with the rights of other proprietors, either above or below him.

(2) Subject to this condition, a riparian proprietor may dam up the stream for the purpose of a mill, or divert the water for the purpose of irrigation. But he has no right to interrupt the regular flow of the stream, if he thereby interferes with the lawful use of the water by other proprietors, & inflicts upon them a sensible injury.

(3) The purchaser of the right to the use of a portion of the water of a river cannot prevent a subsequent purchaser from the same vendor of another portion, from diverting the water by virtue of a right which existed prior to the first purchase.—MINER v. GILMOUR (1859), 12 Moo. 82. —— ——.]—The owner of a tenement adjoining a natural stream has no right to divert the water to a place outside the tenement, & there consume it for purposes unconnected with the tenement.

A natural stream was crossed by a railway line & flowed down to a mill. The railway co. claimed the right to insert a pipe into the stream at the crossing, which was the only place where their land adjoined the stream, & to carry the water along their line to a distant tank, & there to consume it in working their locomotive engines along the whole of their railway. If the pipe was used to its full capacity it might not have substantially injured the mill:—Held: the railway co. were not entitled to carry out their proposal, which was not for purposes connected with the land where it crossed the stream, & the millowner would be justified in stopping up the proposed pipe.

In the ordinary or primary use of flowing water a person dwelling on the banks of a stream is under no restriction. In the exercise of his ordinary rights he may exhaust the water altogether. No lower proprietor can complain of that. In the exercise of rights extraordinary but permissible, the limit of which has never been accurately defined & probably is incapable of accurate definition, a riparian owner is under considerable restrictions. The use must be reasonable. The purposes for which the water is taken must be connected with his tenement, & he is bound to restore the water which he takes & uses

B. User for Extraordinary Purposes.

(a) In General.

85. General rule—User must be reasonable.]—(1) A co. which purchases the land of a riparian owner stands in the same situation as he did with respect to the water rights connected with that land.

(2) The lower riparian owner is entitled to the accustomed flow of the water for the ordinary purposes for which he can use the water, that is quite consistent with the right of the upper owner also to use the water for all ordinary purposes, namely, as has been said ad lavandum et ad potandum, whatever portion of the water may be thereby exhausted & may cease to come down by reason of that use. But farther, there are uses no doubt to which the water may be put by the upper owner, namely, uses connected with the tenement of that upper owner (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

(3) Under certain circumstances, & provided no material injury is done, the water may be used & may be diverted for a time by the upper owner for the purpose of irrigation. That may well be done; the exhaustion of the water which may thereby take place may be so inconsiderable as not to form a subject of complaint by the lower owner, & the water may be restored after the object of irrigation is answered, in a volume substantially equal to that in which it passed before (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

(4) It may well be that there may be a use of the water by the upper owner for . . . manufacturing purposes, so reasonable that no just complaint can be made upon the subject by the lower owner. Whether such a use in any particular case could be made for manufacturing purposes connected with the upper tenement would . . . depend upon whether the use was a reasonable use (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

(5) Whether it was a reasonable use would depend, at all events in some degree, on the magnitude of the stream from which the deduction was made for this purpose over & above the ordinary use of the water (LORD CAIRNS, C.).—SWINDON WATERWORKS CO. v. WILTS & BERKS CANAL NAVIGATION CO. to the reasonable enjoyment of it; & consequently it is only for an unreasonable & unauthorised use of this common benefit that any action will lie.

(3) Whether a riparian proprietor may use the water for the purpose of irrigation, if he again return it into the river, with no other diminution than that caused by the absorption & evaporation attendant on the irrigation, depends on the circumstances of each particular case.

To an action by pltfs., the occupiers of a water grist mill, against deft., a riparian proprietor, for diverting the stream, deft. pleaded not guilty; that at certain periods of the year, when the water was more than sufficient for the use of the mill, deft. diverted small & reasonable quantities of the water for the purpose of irrigating certain closes belonging to her on the bank of the stream, which quantities of water, except that which was absorbed & used in the irrigation, were returned into the stream above the mill; that the diversion was not continuous, but only intermittent; that the quantity of water absorbed & lost was small & "inappreciable," & that the diversion caused no damage to pltf.'s mills. Replication de injuria, & issue thereon. At the trial, it was proved that the diversion was not continuous, & that it caused no diminution of the water cognisable by the senses. The judge, in directing the jury, left it to them with respect to the issue on not guilty, to say whether there was any sensible diminution of the water by reason of the diversion:—Held: this was not, under all circumstances, such an unreasonable use of the water as to be prohibited by law, & the issue on not guilty was rightly found for deft.—EMBREY v. OWEN (1851), 6 Exch. 353; 20 L. 96. Whether right acquired by prescription.]—Although under Prescription Act, 1831 (c. 71), s. 4, no interruption will prevent a right from being acquired by twenty years' user unless it has been acquiesced in for a whole year, yet an interruption for a shorter period may have the effect of showing that the enjoyment never was of right, & thereby of preventing a right being acquired under section 1 of the same Act.

Upon the trial of an issue whether pltf. had acquired a right to a watercourse by a twenty-years' user as of right without interruption, evidence was offered that during the twenty years defts., a water co., who claimed to be entitled to divert the water, had penned it back from pltf.'s land & had laid an information under their local Act, against pltf.'s servant, who had removed the obstruction & who was convicted & fined a shilling, which pltf. paid:—Held: this evidence was properly admissible as negativing an enjoyment by pltf. as of right.—EATON v. SWANSEA WATERWORKS CO. C. Non-Riparian User.

106. General rule.]—(1) A riparian proprietor being entitled to have the water of the stream on the banks of which his property lies flow down to his property as it has been accustomed to flow, subject to the ordinary use of the water by the upper proprietor, the upper proprietor is not entitled to use the water for the purpose of supplying it to undertakings not carried on upon his riparian property, if by so doing he sensibly affects the flow of water to the lower proprietor & it is no defence to say that the loss which he will suffer by being restrained in his use of the water is disproportionate to any loss caused to the lower proprietor by his wrongful act.

(2) A river which naturally runs dry during a good part of the year does not cease to be a river merely because at times it is accustomed to become dry.

(3) A stream which flows in a permanent defined channel, although it is fed exclusively by rainwater running off the surface of the land & ceases to flow during a considerable part of each year, is a watercourse; an owner of land upon its bank is consequently entitled to have the natural flow of the water without sensible diminution or increase, subject to the lawful rights of upper riparian owners, & without sensible alteration in its character or quality.

A stream of the above description flowed through lands the whole of which belonged to resps. with the exception of a plot, situated at its mouth, which belonged to applts. Applts.' land was unsuitable for agriculture & was not used for any purpose. Resps. carried on upon their land the business of boring for oil, which was the sole industry of the locality. For the purpose of that business, & in order to supply water to other properties which were not riparian, resps. diverted part of the water of the stream, & thereby sensibly diminished the flow of water past applts.' land, they also, without negligence, caused by their works a sensible pollution of the water by oil & salt. Applts. had suffered no pecuniary damage: —Held: applts.' rights were being infringed, & they were consequently entitled to relief: under the circumstances of the case there should be declarations as to their rights, but no injunction should issue until resps. had had time to execute works which would enable them to conduct their operations differently.—STOLLMEYER v. TRINIDAD LAKE PETROLEUM CO., [1918] A. The demise included the following liberties: (a) clause 8. To construct, maintain & use a mineral railway upon the surface of the blue land, to be used solely for the purposes of the colliery working the demised minerals & of the lessees; (b) clause 9. To take & use water from any stream or watercourse flowing through or alongside the described lands, & to pump & store the same for the purposes of the colliery. The blue land upon which the mineral railway was constructed, connecting the colliery with the G. W. Ry. on the opposite or west side of the river, was a narrow strip with an average width of 22 yards, abutting west on the river & extending eastward about half-a-mile, from which point the line was continued eastward for a further half mile along another site acquired by defts. up to the colliery workings. Defts. had placed a pipe in the river & erected pumping plant on the blue land at a spot where the mineral railway crossed the river, & by these means took water from the river & conducted it in a 7-inch main laid 18 inches below the surface of the blue strip to the colliery workings, where the water was converted into steam for working the colliery machinery, in which process about 600,000 gallons a week were taken from the river, while the plant working at its full capacity was capable of abstracting more than three times that quantity. Further, defts., who, owing to lack of housing accommodation for their miners, were interested in the building of houses by certain Housing Assocns. on land acquired for that purpose by those bodies adjoining the colliery, used their railway for the carriage of building materials belonging to builders with whom those bodies had contracted.

In an action in which pltf. sought declarations that defts. were not entitled to do any of the acts aforesaid, & an injunction:—Held: (1) defts. having failed to prove that the assumed position of the W. fault was erroneous & that "the described lands" extended up to the bank of the river Alyn, the rights of the parties under the lease must be governed by the assumed position of the W. fault, &, therefore, defts. were not entitled to abstract water therefrom under any liberty contained in clause 9 of the lease; (2) the site of defts.' colliery works, where the water abstracted from the river was converted into steam, was too far from the bank of the river to sustain the character of a riparian tenement; (3) even assuming the site of defts.' colliery works to be a riparian tenement, the diversion & confiscation of part of the water of the river by them was in excess of their right as riparian owners to the use of the water for extraordinary purposes; &, without proof of damage & apart from the consideration of the possible acquisition of right by prescription, was an infringement of the rights of pltf., entitling him to an injunction.—ATTWOOD v. LLAY MAIN COLLIERIES, [1926] Ch. 444; 95 L. 113. Liability for "injuriously affecting" stream—Within Public Health Acts—Unauthorised abstraction for flushing sewers.]—The local board of health constructed a sewer along the bank of a river, with trap doors in it, communicating with the river. When the river was full & water abundant, the board, by means of the trap doors, drew water off from the river & let it into the sewer, for the purpose of flushing it. The place where the trap doors were placed was at a part of the river above that on which a mill, occupied by prosecutor, was situated. On one occasion, the board made a hole in the bottom of the river, & so let the stream run into the sewer for nearly two days continuously, during that time abstracting the water of the river in such quantities that the prosecutor's mill ceased working for want of water:—Held: the acts of the board were in excess of the powers given them by statute; they had injuriously affected the river; & prosecutor might have brought an action for the wrong, & also, in such action, obtained an injunction against the continuance of it; he was therefore an individual entitled by law to prevent or be relieved against the injuriously affecting the river, within 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 73; & consequently, he could not sustain a mandamus against the board to summon a jury to assess him compensation.—R. v. DARLINGTON LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH (1865), 6 B. & S. 562; 6 New Rep. 178; 35 L. Defts. did not admit that the river was vested in pltfs. & claimed a prescriptive right to take from the river superfluous water not required for the purposes of the navigation. The user proved was that defts. took as much water as they required without regard to the needs of the navigation:—Held: pltfs. had not under their statutes any proprietary right in the water, & therefore the claim failed.—A.-G. v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. Defts. maintained & used that which, without a safeguard, tapped Oulton Broad & let the water escape, so that they abstracted & took the water, & as a matter of fact under the power proved there was a particular damage, & the Eastern Counties Ry. co. were liable.—PRESTON v. NORFOLK RY. 122. —— ——.]—(1) Every proprietor of lands on the banks of a natural stream has a right to use the water, provided he so uses it as not to work any material injury to the rights of the proprietors above or below him on the stream, & may begin to exercise that right wherever he will.

Pltf. had immemorially enjoyed the benefit of irrigating certain meadows with the water of the Y., subject to the right of the occupier of a mill to detain the water for the use of his mill; &, although the natural flow of the river was prevented by the exercise of the miller's right, the water came down at such times that pltf. was enabled to irrigate his meadows effectually. But, of late, deft. had, for the purpose of irrigating his own adjacent land, from time to time diverted the water after it had passed the mill, & before it reached pltf.'s meadows: &, although it did not appear that the quantity of water which ultimately reached pltf.'s meadows was thereby sensibly diminished, yet the effect was that the water was detained by the process of irrigation, & did not arrive till so late in the day that pltf. was deprived of the power to use it fully:—Held: this detention of the water by deft. was a use of it which was in its character necessarily injurious to the natural rights of pltf. as a riparian proprietor, & a ground of action.

(2) By usage, he may acquire a right to use the water in a manner not justified by his natural right: but such acquired right has no operation against the natural rights of a landowner higher up the stream, unless the user by which it was acquired affects the use that he himself has made of the stream, or his power to use it, so as to raise the presumption of a grant, & so render the tenement above a servient tenement.

(3) It is not necessary to show actual damage to the pltf.'s reversionary interest: it is enough to show an obstruction of his right, &, such obstruction of his right being shown, the law will infer damage.

(b) Statutory Power.

136. Power under local Act—Limitation of right to divert—Liability of successors in title to original statutory body.]—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. xlii, for making a navigable communication for ships between Norwich & the sea, empowered the Company of Proprietors of the Norwich & Lowestoft Navigation to erect a lock or sluice, with proper stop gates, to prevent the waters of a broad & certain navigable rivers from flowing into a certain lake, & to make an entrance cut from that lake to the sea. Sect. 3 provided, that nothing in the Act contained should authorise or enable the co. to divert or abstract any of the waters of the broad or rivers for any purpose whatsoever, except for the purpose of supplying certain intended cuts with water, & for the purposes of locking ships or vessels from or into the lake. This entrance cut from the lake into the sea was constructed under the Act, & the level of the water in the lake was kept lower than the level of the broad & rivers. The lock was made with proper gates in pursuance of the Act. By divers Acts of Parliament, & ultimately by 9 & 10 Vict. c. cxxxii, the lock & works became vested in the Norfolk Ry. co. By an agreement between the Norfolk Ry. co. & the Eastern Counties Ry. co., reciting that the works, including the lock in question had become vested in the Norfolk Ry. co., it was provided that " The Eastern Counties Ry. co. should have, as between themselves & the other co., the exclusive possession, use, enjoyment & receipt of all the property, rights, etc., of the works respectively in the same manner as the Norfolk Ry. co. have become entitled to the same under or by virtue of the respective Acts, etc., or otherwise. After the making of the agreement, the Eastern Counties Ry. co. entered into possession of the lock & works, & the Norfolk Ry. co. were not in possession. At the time of the making of the agreement, the lock had been allowed to become out of repair, & such want of repair continued after the lock & works came into the possession of the Eastern Counties Ry. co. ; & during all that time large quantities of water escaped from the broad & rivers into the lake :—Held : (1) such water was diverted or abstracted contrary to the prohibition in 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. xlii, s. 3 ; (2) the Norfolk Ry. co. were not responsible for the diversion or abstraction of the waters subsequent to the making of the agreement, & the passing of 17 & 18 Vict. c. ccxx, while the lock & works were in the possession of the Eastern Counties Ry. co.—PRESTON v. NORFOLK RY. Pltf. was a riparian owner lower down the stream. The effect of defts.' pumping from the well was that the general level of the water in the soil in the neighbourhood of the well was lowered to the extent of about 12 inches, with the result that the soil became dry, & a portion of the water flowing down the stream leaked out through the bed & side of the stream, so that the volume of the water in it was substantially diminished by the time it reached pltf.'s land. None of the water, however, which so escaped from the stream in consequence of defts.' pumping found its way into defts.' well :—Held : as defts. did not appropriate any of the water of the stream by pumping it up through their pipes, but merely caused it to sink a short distance into the ground by reason of their withdrawing the support of the lower subterranean water, the damage to the water that supplied the mill arose & flowed, for diversion & subtraction of such water. Pltf. claimed under grants & certain Regulations & Ordinances made by the Governor & Council of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, as well as upon a right of servitude by prescription. Judgment was given with damages, for pltf. 212. Under statutory power—Though party injured unable to obtain compensation—Navigation undertakers.]—By a Navigation Act the undertakers were authorised to make & maintain such navigation, & from time to time to alter their dams & weirs for that purpose ; & to enter & make works upon lands for the purpose of the undertaking, first making satisfaction to the owners as Comrs. under the Act should direct. By a subsequent clause, any persons injured by the works were to receive compensation to be assessed by the Comrs. The Comrs. were named in the Act, & power given them to appoint successors from time to time. The navigation was made ; &, as part of it, a dam across a river was enlarged. Subsequently, all the Comrs. died, without having appointed successors. 229. —— —— Right by grant—Purchase.]—A natural stream was divided at a point E. into two branches by a large stone called a "feather," placed in the stream for that purpose before living memory. One branch of the divided stream ran down to the river Irwell, & the other branch flowed into a farmyard, & there supplied a watering trough used for watering cattle & domestic purposes, the overflow from the trough diffusing itself over the surface of the land, & passing away by perlocation through the soil to the river. In 1847 W., the owner of the farm on which the watering trough stood, & also of the intervening land between the farm & the river, & of a mill on the bank of the river, constructed reservoirs to collect the water overflowing from the trough, & conducted it from them by means of a covered drain to the mill on the bank of the river. In 1865 he became the owner, by purchase, of the rest of the land through which this branch flowed, & in 1867 he conveyed the mill, with all the water rights annexed & appurtenant thereto, to pltf. Defts., landowners, on the banks of the stream above the point of division E., obstructed the stream, & thereby diminished the flow of water to the reservoirs & the mill, whereupon pltf. brought an action against them for so doing :—Held : pltf., who had acquired by purchase the same right as W. previously had to the uninterrupted flow of the water to the trough, & to the flow of it from the trough to the mill, was entitled to maintain the action for the obstruction complained of.—HOLKER v. PORRITT (1875), L. Pltfs., who were constituted under an Order under the Land Drainage Acts, 1861 & 1918, & had the powers of Comrs. of Sewers, & were the drainage board within whose district the mill, mill pond & river at that point were situated, called upon defts. to remove the enhancement. Defts. refused to do so. Pltfs. thereupon, without first obtaining a finding of two justices at petty sessions that the removal of the enhancement was necessary for the effectual drainage of land within the jurisdiction of the Comrs. & without having compensation for the injury caused by such removal assessed as provided by Land Drainage Act, 1861 (c. 133), ss. 17–20, entered upon defts.' land on several occasions & themselves removed the enhancement, but defts. on each occasion restored it. Pltfs., without having made an order under sect. 33 of the Act of 1861, then brought an action against deft., alleging that the enhancement held back the water in the river, causing the meadows adjacent thereto to be flooded & causing washouts in the banks & that it would interfere with the duty of pltfs. effectively to drain their district. Defts. pleaded that the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action, that the weir had existed at the same height for twenty years, & they counterclaimed damages for trespass. The jury found that defts. were not entitled to the depth of water in the mill pond which they claimed, but that they were entitled to a greater depth of water than the pltfs. said:—Held: (1) Land Drainage Act, 1861 (c. 133), did not give pltfs. any right to go upon defts.' land & remove the enhancement to the weir without first obtaining a finding of the justices that its removal was necessary for the effectual drainage of pltfs.' district & having compensation assessed, as was provided by sects. 17 to 20 of the Act of 1861, nor had pltfs. any right by statute passed before 1861, or at common law, to go upon defts.' land & remove the obstructions, & therefore pltfs. had committed a trespass; (2) neither Land Drainage Act, 1861 (c. 133), s. 16, nor any statute passed before 1861, conferred upon pltfs. as Comrs. of Sewers the right to bring an action, without any previous proceedings, to enforce the removal of an obstruction to the drainage of their district, when such obstruction was a mill dam or weir, & further that if sect. 16 of the Act of 1861 did give a right to bring an action it was a right subject to the restrictions contained in sects. 17 to 20 of the Act of 1861.—SALISBURY & FORDINGBRIDGE DRAINAGE DISTRICT BOARD v. SOUTHERN TANNING CO. The flow of water down deft.'s mill-stream was diminished, & deft. in consequence pulled down the ancient weir, which prevented the water from flowing down pltf.'s gutter:—Held: (1) no suspension of pltf.'s right to the enjoyment of the flow of water as it had formerly existed was caused by his having become a wrongdoer, & deft. was not justified in stopping pltf.'s excessive user by means which altogether prevented his enjoyment of the water, but only in stopping it by the least injurious means in his power; (2) semble: if there had been a confusion of rights, deft. would have been justified in abating the nuisance.—HILL v. COCK (1872), 26 L. These mines had for many years been connected with one another by means of old underground channels & passages which it was no longer possible to close, & they formed one large reservoir of brine. Into this reservoir there also found its way a certain quantity of other brine which came through fissures in the soil from land outside pltfs.' property, but a substantial portion of the brine therein was formed by the dissolution of the pltfs.' salt rock in the manner above-mentioned. Defts., in the exercise of a licence to pump brine granted to them by the previous owner of one of pltfs.' mines, pumped large quantities of brine from the mine & from the reservoir & appropriated it for their own profit :—Held : defts. were not guilty of any actionable wrong in so doing, notwithstanding that they thereby abstracted salt which had formed part of pltfs.' rock salt & the continuance of the pumping would cause fresh surface water to dissolve further portions of pltfs.' rock into brine, which in its turn would be abstracted by defts. pumps.—SALT UNION, LTD. v. BRUNNER, MOND & CO., [1906] 2 K. SUB-SECT. 2.—DRAINAGE WATER.

263. Right of owner to drain own property—Flow to neighbouring land diminished.]—(1) The owner of land has an unqualified right to drain it for agricultural purposes, in order to get rid of mere surface water, the supply of the water being casual & its flow following no regular or definite course; & a neighbouring proprietor cannot complain that he is thereby deprived of such water which otherwise would have come to his land.

The land of pltf. & deft. was contiguous, & on the outside of deft.'s land & near to it, was a wet springy spot, where at most seasons of the year some water rose to the surface & collected in sufficient quantity to flow down the slope of the land. In times of wet a great body of water flowed down, & after a long drought there was hardly any & sometimes none. There was no regularly formed ditch or channel for the water, the place where it flowed being constantly trodden in by cattle. The water which was not absorbed, &, except in times of drought, all of it was not absorbed, ran into an old watercourse of pltf.'s, which led into a reservoir of pltf.'s. The water had so flowed for upwards of twenty years. Deft., for the purpose of draining the land, & of supplying some part of his property with water, diverted this water from pltf.'s reservoir. At another spot on pltf.'s land, as long ago as any one could recollect, water had always risen to the surface. There had generally been a drinking place for cattle formed with stones, & the overflow of the water went down a ditch, & thence into a watercourse to pltf.'s reservoir:—Held: deft. was not liable to pltf. for having deprived him of the use of such waters, he having diverted them by draining his land, for the purpose of getting rid of the water, & of supplying another portion of his property with it.

(2) For upwards of twenty years water had flowed through an old drain on deft.'s land, & along an ancient watercourse & thence along a close of deft.'s, called G., & had thence contributed to supply pltf.'s mills after their erection in 1845. In that year deft. by deed conveyed to pltf. the close G., "together with all ways, watercourses, liberties, privileges, rights, members, & appurtenances to the same close belonging or appertaining," subject to the proviso, that it should be lawful for deft. to use, for any manufacturing, domestic, or agricultural purposes, any water flowing from or through the contiguous lands of deft. unto & into the close G., returning the surplus, or so much as remained, after being used for the purposes aforesaid, into its usual channel at a certain point, so that the water should not be diverted from its then course, but be allowed to flow into the close G. Deft. erected a lock up tank upon his land, & caused the water which arose on his land, near to the close G., & which had previously been accustomed to flow along the old drain & ancient watercourse into the close G., & he caused the water to be conveyed from the tank to a lower part of his land, to be used by his tenants. This water was used by them for the purposes mentioned in the proviso to the deed, but the surplus could not be returned to the close G:—Held: by the deed deft. granted to pltf. the use of the water, subject only to the use by himself of it as specified in the proviso; &, by locking it up, he had diverted it, & was liable to an action for a breach of his covenant, by reason of such diversion.—RAWSTRON v. TAYLOR (1855), 11 Exch. 369; 25 L. Shortly afterwards defts. erected, a little below the bridge, but above the pltf.'s mill, a new cotton mill & steam-engine, with a reservoir, which drew off water from the brook between the pltf.'s reservoir & the bridge, & they discharged the heated water which they had used for their new mill into the brook, whereby on one occasion they raised the temperature of the water, which the pltf. had to use for condensing his engine, from 57 to 68. All the engineering witnesses agreed that every additional degree of heat above 41 renders water less fit for condensing purposes. It was also deposed that on another occasion, in consequence of the increased temperature, the pltf.'s engine worked "nearly half a stroke per minute less" than the usual rate of twenty-eight strokes per minute.

Upon motion for a decree, the ct. granted a perpetual injunction, restraining the defts. from discharging heated water, so as to increase the temperature of the water which the pltf. used for condensing; being of opinion that the evidence, exclusive of that as to the actual diminution in the working of the engine, showed a material interference with the quality of the water to which the pltf. was entitled under the demise; & that the question whether such interference was such as to give him a right to damages was one which he was not obliged to try.

Deft. erected dye works on the same stream, by which the water was polluted. Pltf. brought an action against deft. & recovered a farthing damages, & now applied for an injunction to restrain deft. from a continuous infringement of his rights:—Held: (1) a person may by long user acquire a right to the water of a stream free from pollution, though he may have no proprietorship in the stream, & may acquire a right to pour polluted matter into a stream as against all new comers; (2) a person having established his right at law is not, as a matter of course, entitled to an injunction, particularly where the injunction would not restore pltf. to the right he has established, & where the act complained of may be compensated by pecuniary damages; (3) in this case the evidence proved that, owing to the increase of polluting matter poured into the stream from other sources than that of the deft.'s works, pltf. never could be reinstated in his original rights; the damage might be compensated by money; & pltf. had been guilty of such an amount of acquiescence as would disentitle him to an injunction.—WOOD v. SUTCLIFFE (1851), 2 Sim. 276. —— Pollution of percolating water—Findng way to plaintiff's supply—Stream.] — A. was possessor & occupier of an ancient mill & lands adjoining, & carried on therein the business of a manufacturer of paper, which had from time immemorial been carried on in them. The mill & lands were situate in a valley at the foot of a range of hills sloping towards & terminating in a tall precipitous rock abutting upon them. Inside this rock, & at the elevation of a few feet above the lands, was, from time immemorial, a natural cavern, & the water produced by the rainfall on a portion of the hills ran by underground passages into it, &, after traversing the floor of the cavern in a defined stream, flowed by an underground passage out of the cavern into an open natural basin in the lands of A., & from thence in an open & defined stream to the mill in a pure & unpolluted state. In the year 1857, B. became possessor & occupier of land & premises on the summit of the hills, at a higher elevation than the cavern, & worked on them a machinery for extracting from the soil minute particles of lead intermixed with it. In working this he constructed eight "buddles," or circular pits, in the surface of the ground, into which water was brought through artificial cuts. From these buddles polluted water was discharged into drains communicating with two "swallets," or natural rents existing from time immemorial in the limestone rock of the hills, & having an underground passage for water communicating with an outlet, at which the water escaped in an open stream at their foot. The water passages from these two swallets communicated with the cavern: through which the polluted water flowed, & from thence mingled with the stream flowing through the cavern into the basin, & thence to A.'s lands & mill, whereby the water was fouled:—Held: an action for fouling the stream was maintainable by A. against B.—HODGKINSON v. ENNOR (1863), 4 B. & S. 229; 2 New Rep. 272; 32 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—ACQUISITION OF RIGHT TO POLLUTE.

A. Grant.

280. General rule—Right to pollute subject matter of grant.] — Declaration for wrongfully throwing sand, stones, rubble & other stuff into a natural stream of water flowing through pltf.'s lands, whereby the channel was obstructed & the water flowed over & upon the lands & destroyed their produce. Fifth plea: that defts. were the occupiers of lands near to & above pltf.'s lands & of a tin mine situate within the lands of defts.; & that defts. & all other occupiers of the lands & tin mine of defts., for twenty years, etc., enjoyed as of right & without interruption, the right from time to time as occasion required, at their free will & pleasure, of working the tin mine & winning therefrom tin & tin ore, & in the course of so working & winning the same, of washing away, by means of the stream of water in the declaration mentioned, where the same flows through the lands & tin mine of defts., the sand, stones, rubble & other stuff which were dislodged or severed in the course of so working the tin mine, & of casting & throwing from & out of the tin mine the sand, stones, rubble & other stuff into the said stream where the same flows through the land, & tin mine of defts., & of having the same washed, & carried away by the flow of the stream towards the sea, to that part of the channel of the stream which is situated within the lands of pltf., as to the lands & tin mines of defts. appertaining, & for the more beneficial enjoyment thereof, etc. The plea then justified the acts complained of in the exercise of the above right. The sixth plea alleged an enjoyment of the right for forty years. The eighth plea stated that the land of pltf. & the land & tin mine of defts. & the channel of the stream were within the Stannaries of Cornwall & subject to the customs of the said Stannaries, & that there was an immemorial custom for the tinners & miners within the Stannaries, working & winning tin & tin ore from any tin mine near to a stream of water flowing by such mine, to wash away in such stream the sand, stones, & rubble which should become dislodged in the course of working the mine, & cast the same into the stream, etc. The ninth plea stated that defts. & other occupiers of the land wherein the tin mine of defts. is situate, for twenty years, etc., enjoyed as of right, & without interruption, the right from time to time as occasion required, at their free will & pleasure, of using the stream where the same flowed through the lands of defts., for the purpose of getting such minerals as they might desire & be able to get therefrom & for washing away the sand, stones, rubble & other stuff which it might be necessary to dislodge in the course of so getting the minerals & of having the same washed away by the water of the stream, etc. The tenth plea alleged an enjoyment of a similar right for forty years. The twelfth plea alleged an immemorial custom for miners within the Stannaries, working & winning tin & other minerals & things capable of being dug or won from any mine situate near a stream of water, to wash away by means of such stream the sand, stones, rubble & other stuff which should become dislodged in the course of working the mine, etc. On demurrer to these pleas:—Held: the fifth, sixth, ninth & tenth pleas were good, since the right claimed in those pleas might be the subject-matter of a grant; the eighth & twelfth pleas were also good, for the custom alleged in those pleas was not indefinite or unreasonable, the user being limited to the necessary working of the mine.—CARLYON v. LOVERING (1857), 1 H. & N. 784; 26 L. In 1858, by arrangement between S., P., & deft., P. surrendered his lease, & S. granted a new lease to deft. of the premises late in P.'s occupation; deft. being described in the lease as "bleacher," & there being a clause in it that all buildings erected by deft. for the purpose of bleaching should be the property of S. at the end of the term. In 1859 pltf. purchased the fee in both mills. Deft. carried on the business of a bleacher, & used his premises as P. had done, the premises, including the drain, remaining precisely as in P.'s time. Pltf. occupied the other mill himself, & used it as a paper mill, & brought an action against deft. for fouling the stream by discharging the refuse into it:—Held: the lease might be explained by the state of the premises &

284. ——.]—Count by the owner of a mill on the river C., which mill of right ought to be supplied with a flow of water from a mill pool on the C., against the owner of works higher up the stream, for placing cinders, etc., at his works, so as to fall into the stream of the C., whence they were carried down into pltf.'s mill pool & filled it up, to the obstruction of his right to water. Plea: that the occupiers of deft.'s works had, for more than twenty years of right placed cinders, etc., the refuse of their works, on the banks of the stream & in its channel; & that the cinders, etc., complained of were such refuse, so placed. The issue on this plea having been found for deft.:—Held: the plea was bad, non abstante veredicto, as not showing that deft. had, during twenty years, of right caused the refuse to go into pltf.'s pond; as, till the occupiers of the mill sustained some damage from deft.'s user, no right as against them began to be acquired.—MURGATROYD v. ROBINSON (1857), 7 E. & B. 391; 26 L. 285. —— Effect of increased size of business.]—To an action for polluting a stream, & impregnating it with noxious substances, whereby pltf.'s cattle were unable to drink the water, deft. pleaded an immemorial right to use the water of the stream for the purposes of his trade of a tanner & fellmonger, & returning it polluted to the stream when so used, & also prescriptive rights for twenty & forty years respectively. Pltf. new-assigned "that he sued not only for the grievances in the pleas admitted & attempted to be justified, but for that the deft. committed the grievances over & above what the defences justified." At the trial, it appeared that deft. & his father & grandfather had for a long series of years carried on the business of tanners at the place in question, using the water of the stream as they wanted it; but that, within the last twelve years, the tannery business had been considerably enlarged, & the business, & consequently the pollution of the stream, increased fourfold. Without leaving anything to the jury, the judge ruled that deft. was entitled to a verdict on all the issues except the first & second:—Held: whether the pleas were to be understood as claiming an immemorial or a prescriptive right, not limited to the purposes of the tannery, or the more limited right to use the water for the purposes of the business as carried on more than twenty years ago, the verdict was not warranted by the evidence, & the new-assignment was well pleaded.—MOORE v. WEBB (1857), 1 C. The quantity of sewage matter thrown into the stream was greatly increased, the population of the town having increased nearly one-half, & the extent of sewers from 250 yards in 1848 to 10,500 yards in 1855; & besides other evidence of that, it appeared that sheep could no longer be washed there, that the fish were all dead, & that the exhalations were noisome. Pltf. had been in correspondence with the board on the subject of remedying the nuisance until Sept. 19, 1855, which was the date of the last communication in which they held out hopes of doing so. The bill & information was filed on Jan. 15, 1856:—Held: (1) the practice, long previous & up to 1848, of a few houses in the town to drain into the river, afforded no ground for the local board setting up a prescriptive right, & the local board, as a modern corpn., could claim no prescriptive rights; (2) the stream was a private stream, the property of pltf., & he had private ground of complaint to support the bill, as well as the public nuisance on which to found the information; & the board had no rights, except with his consent, under sect. 145 of the Act; (3) there was no such laches on the part of pltf. as to prevent him from having relief on an interlocutory application.—A.-G. v. LUTON LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH (1856), 27 L. The owners of the four cottages subsequently erected twenty-nine new cottages & other buildings on the western side of the drain, & proceeded to make use of the 18-inch pipe to discharge the sewage from these new erections into the metropolitan drain. On an application by the Metropolitan Board of Works for an injunction to restrain the user of the 18-inch pipe to the four old cottages, the judge granted the injunction, on the ground that the Board of Works had no power to extend the benefits of the metropolitan drainage system to persons outside the metropolitan area :—Held : as defts. could not allege a prescriptive right to discharge sewage into the brook or a drain, the injunction was rightly granted.—METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. 291. Enjoyment must not be secret or unknown.]—(1) Pltfs. were a sanitary authority, & for more than twenty years before action brought defts. had discharged into pltfs.' sewers the waste liquors from their borax works. This effluent contained borax in solution. Pltfs. utilised part of the area under their control for a sewage farm on which various crops were raised, & they alleged that this noxious effluent had injuriously affected their farm & the crops thereon. There was evidence that the discharge from defts.' works was intermittent, & as a rule made at night, & neither pltfs. nor their predecessors had notice of it. No perceptible damage to the crops on the farm had been noticed prior to 1908. Defts. claimed a prescriptive right to continue the discharge of their effluent & denied that it was noxious or caused any injury to the farm. In an action by pltfs. claiming an injunction to restrain defts. from continuing the discharge of this noxious chemical solution :—Held : as the enjoyment of the alleged easement had been secret & unknown & unsuspected by pltfs. or their predecessors, it was not of such a character as would establish a prescriptive right.

It has been decided, both at law & in this ct., that no person is entitled, on the ground of ancient custom or privilege, to collect a mass of sewage matter, & pour it in, at one point, into a stream in such a quantity, that the river cannot dilute it, on its passage down to the lower riparian proprietors, as the effect of such an act is to create an evil which must be illegal, being such as no custom can authorise (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—A.-G. v. RICHMOND (1866), L. of a goit & dealing with the same in the following manner. The water so diverted being full of substances discharged into the stream from paper manufactories, not belonging to deft., higher up the stream, it had, before it could be used by deft. for the purposes of his business, to be impounded in a reservoir & allowed to settle. Whilst it was so impounded, the substances contained therein sank to the bottom, &, after about three days, became putrescent in the form of sludge. The water at the top when thus cleared was taken from the reservoir & used for condensing & boiler purposes. Once a week the reservoir was cleaned by opening the sluice gates into the river, & allowing the water to flow through the reservoir & out into the stream, carrying with it the sludge deposited in the reservoir. The effluent water as it went into the stream through the sluice-gates contained 97·6 per cent. of water & 2·4 per cent. of solid matter:—Held: (1) the solid matter when it entered the stream from the reservoir was "in suspension in water" within sect. 20 & therefore not "solid matter" within sect. 2 of the Act; (2) assuming that what was put into the stream was "solid matter" within sect. 2, deft. was protected by sect. 17 & therefore not liable to be proceeded against under the Act.—RIVER RIBBLE JOINT COMMITTEE v. HALLIWELL, SAME v. SHORROCK, [1899] 2 Q. After being used in such mill it was discharged in a channel in a polluted state. After leaving the mill the water so polluted ran past certain cottages into a stream & so into a river. Many cottages emptied their sewage into the channel until 1892, when a sewage scheme was put into operation, & at the present time two cottages discharged their slop water, & three small watercourses fell into the channel below the mill:—Held: the channel was a "stream" within above Act, s. 20.—WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE RIVERS BOARD v. PRESTON & SONS (1904), 92 L. Applts. alleged that the burns & streams in question were not "streams" within the meaning of the Act, in respect that at the date of the passing of the Act they were mainly used as sewers. There was a definite finding in fact that the appellants discharged all their sewage into the burns in question:—Held: the burns in question were "streams" & not "watercourses mainly used as sewers" within above Act.

The obvious policy & the obvious effect of the Act is to stop the pouring of foul water into a stream, but it excuses this being done in certain circumstances, as for example if it was being done as long ago as 1876, & the best practicable means are now used to render it harmless (LORD LOREBURN, C.).—AIRDRIE MAGISTRATES v. LANARK COUNTY COUNCIL, COATBRIDGE MAGISTRATES v. LANARK COUNTY COUNCIL, [1910] A. In an action for an order requiring defts to abstain from polluting a stream:—Held: the principle to be applied by the ct. in exercising its discretion as to the making of an order in such a case is that regard must not be had to the amount of pollution already in the river, but that if, from a particular place, there is sent into the river a quantity of polluting matter which exceeds the minimum of which the law will not take heed, pltfs. are entitled to an order.—STAFFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. SEISDON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL (1907), 96 L. 305. —— ——.]—In 1832 applts. came into possession of a certain factory, & then commenced the business of fellmongers & manufacturers of sheepskin rugs, which they carried on down to 1852, & during this period the refuse of the fellmongery & sheepskin factory was discharged into a certain stream, which was an arterial drainage within the jurisdiction of resps. In 1852 the business of tanners was added, & the refuse from the tanyard was in addition to the other refuse, discharged into the stream. In 1878 applts. altered their premises, & began the manufacture of leather boards, & the washings from such new factory, which were different in character from those before discharged, were from & after 1878 poured into the stream; no refuse of tannery or fellmongery was then poured in, but only the washings of the dyes used to colour the leather boards. Such washings were not so foul in degree as the washings from the factory before 1878. Applts. were summoned by resps. for causing or permitting these washings of the leather board manufactory to flow into the stream, & were convicted & fined. The resps. contended that the pouring into the stream the refuse of the fellmongery & sheepskin manufactory from 1832, & the refuse of the tannery from 1852, did not confer the right to pour into the stream the refuse & washings from the leather board manufactory opened in 1878, either under the Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), or at common law. Applts. contended that they had proved a legal prescriptive right to cause such washings to flow into the stream:—Held: the conviction was right, as applts. had not, at the passing of Land Drainage Act, 1861 (c. 133), the right to pour into the stream the refuse & washings of their leather board manufactory, & the fact that they had poured other refuse & washings into the stream since 1832 did not give them such right, although those washings were less foul than those formerly poured into the stream.—CLARKE v. SOMERSETSHIRE DRAINAGE COMRS. 306. Local navigation Act—"Wilful" discharge—Discharge in course of business.]—A local Act, which was passed for improving the navigation of certain rivers, enacted that, "if any person or persons shall wilfully throw any soil . . . into any part of the said rivers . . . or of any drains, trenches, or watercourses thereunto belonging, every such person shall for every such offence forfeit" a sum of money. Applt. was a tanner, having premises on a small natural stream at a point about four miles from one of the rivers, into which it flowed at a place where that river was navigable; in the course of his business he discharged refuse from his works into the natural stream; he was convicted by a stipendiary magistrate of an offence against the foregoing enactment:—Held: (1) the words "drains, trenches, or watercourses thereunto belonging" applied only to artificial streams, made for the purpose of improving the navigation of the rivers, & did not apply to natural streams, & therefore the conviction was wrong; (2) inasmuch as applt. discharged the refuse in the course of his business, he did not "wilfully" throw it into the stream within the meaning of the statute.—SMITH v. BARNHAM (1876), 1 Ex. The sect. contained a proviso that "this section shall not apply to any person having a legal right to cause such water, washing or liquid as aforesaid to flow into any existing river, stream or watercourse." Before & at the time of the passing of the Act the sewage of a town flowed into a tidal river within the jurisdiction of the comrs. The urban sanitary authority proposed to remodel their system of drainage, & to make a new outfall into the river, in place of those previously existing:—Held: assuming the tidal river to be a watercourse within the meaning of the Act, the case fell within the above-mentioned proviso, & the comrs. had no power to prevent the carrying out of the new drainage works. The exemption in the proviso is not to be restricted to the precise amount or manner of pollution going on at the time of the passing of the Act.—SOMERSETSHIRE DRAINAGE COMRS. v. BRIDGWATER CORPN. 310. —— Pollution by " solid " matter.]—West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894, (c. clxvi), s. 5, makes it an offence for any person to put or cause to be put or knowingly permit to be put into any river or stream within the jurisdiction of the rivers board, after enumerating certain specified solid matters, " any deposit in a mill dam, or any sludge, or any solid sewage matter " ; & " solid matter " was defined as not including " particles of matter in suspension in water." Resps., who were manufacturers, were owners & occupiers of a mill & a large mill dam into which flowed through a goit the water of a certain river ; & polluting trade effluents from several mills & the sewage of several hundred houses also passed into the river above resps.' mill & thence through the goit into resps.' dam, & in consequence of the waters being impounded in the dam by resps., a quantity of mud, sludge, & deposit had been formed in the basin of the dam ; but there had been no discharge into the dam by resps. themselves of any effluent, or any polluting matter, solid or otherwise. Resps., in order to clean out the dam, turned the whole waters of the river into the dam, while men with spades conveyed the mud & deposit into the current as it flowed through the dam, & by this operation the mud, sludge, & deposit in the dam became admixed with water & was carried in suspension through the outlet from the dam into the river below the mill, rendering the river muddy & turbid for a considerable distance. The effluent as it went from the dam into the river consisted of over 99½ per cent. of liquids, & less than ½ per cent. of solids :—Held : resps. had committed no offence against sect. 5 of the Act, either in unlawfully causing to be put, or in knowingly permitting to be carried, into the river the mud, sludge, & deposit from the dam, as the stuff sent out into the river, being in a liquid state & containing less than ½ per cent. of solid matter, could not then be described as mud, sludge, & deposit, & it was immaterial that it may have been so in the dam before the operation of cleaning began.—WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE RIVERS BOARD v. RAWSON (1903), 89 L. 311. —— Isolated act.]—By Lee Conservancy Act 1868 (c. cliv), s. 92, as amended by Lee Conservancy Act, 1900 (c. cxvii), it is provided that where sewage or other offensive or injurious matter is caused or suffered to flow or pass into the Lee or any of its tributaries, the conservancy board shall give notice to the person causing or suffering the same so to flow or pass requiring him to discontinue the flow or passage thereof within a time to be specified in the notice, not being less than three months ; & by sect. 93 the person to whom this notice is given shall within the time specified discontinue the same, &, if he fails to do so, he shall be liable to the penalties therein prescribed. A sewage effluent of an offensive nature flowed from resps.' sewage farm into a tributary of the river, owing to their not using a sufficient number of tanks, & in 1902 the conservancy board served a notice upon resps. requiring them within three months to discontinue the flow or passage of sewage or other offensive or injurious matter from their tanks into the river or a tributary thereof. More than three years afterwards on a certain day it was found that, owing to the negligence of a workman in resps.' employment, sewage water was allowed to flow from the sewage farm into a channel communicating with the river :—Held : the isolated & negligent act of resps. in allowing the sewage matter from their tanks to flow or pass into a tributary of the river on the day in question was not of itself sufficient to show that they had been guilty of any offence under sects. 92 & 93 of the Act.—LEE CONSERVANCY BOARD v. LEYTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1906), 95 L. In 1909 applts. constructed a chamber in each of the two sewers for the purpose of intercepting solid matter & preventing it from being discharged into Little Creek, but the effluent from those chambers still contained sewage matter. In proceedings against applts. under Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii), for suffering sewage to pass into Little Creek, which was either a part of the Thames or a tributary thereof within sect. 90 of the Act :—Held : (1) Little Creek was a part of the Thames or a tributary thereof ; (2) applts. had " caused or suffered " sewage to flow or pass into Little Creek within sect. 94.—ROCHFORD RURAL COUNCIL v. PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY, [1914] 2 K. 321. Statutory power—Exercise must be within term of power.]—By a local Act, comrs. were appointed for improving the town of B. By a subsequent Act that Act was repealed, & by sect. 6 all the property, rights & privileges of the comrs. vested in the corpn. of B. upon whom new powers were conferred. In that Act the clauses of Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 34), relating to the management of sewers & the cleansing of the streets, were incorporated. It was further enacted, that nothing done by the town council, if done bonâ fide for the purpose of executing the Act, should render them personally liable to any action ; & by sect. 6, following the provisions relating to the construction of sewers, it was provided that if, in execution of the powers of the Act, the council should deprive any of the mills upon a certain river of water, to the use of which the owners were entitled, compensation should be made. In an action by a millowner for depriving him of water, by casting mud & rubbish into sewers & streams running into the river, the corpn. justified : First, under a right acquired by twenty years' user, partly by the old comrs. & partly by the corpn., of cleansing the streets & throwing into the sewers & streams such part of the mud & soil as could not conveniently be carted away. Secondly, under a similar custom for the inhabitants to cleanse. Thirdly, under the local improvement Act, alleging that they had acted bonâ fide. Upon these pleas & the subsequent pleadings thereto :—Held : (1) a user for twenty years, partly by the comrs. & partly by the corpn., would not confer any right under Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (c. 14), & sect. 6, of the local Act would not transfer to the corpn. a right which was only inchoate & incomplete when that Act came into operation ; (2) the custom alleged, if it could ever have had a legal existence, was destroyed by Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 34), s. 97, rendering it unlawful for any person not employed by the council to remove dirt from the streets ; (3) defts. were not authorised by the local Act & the clauses of the general Act incorporated therewith unnecessarily to throw mud & soil collected from the streets into the public streams & sewers ; &, although the acts were done bonâ fide, they were wrongful, & therefore the subject of an action, & not merely of compensation under sect. 25.—EVANS v. BIRMINGHAM CORPN. (1853), 1 C. L. R. 858 ; 21 L. T. O. S. 182 ; 17 J. P. 422.

322. —— —— Increased size of sewer.]—(1) Defts., the corpn. of a borough, were empowered by a special Act, which incorporated Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 34), to make sewers ; but it was provided that it should not be lawful for them to cause any new sewer to open or drain into the river Roche at any point above the Town Mill Weir. Pltfs., the owners in fee of the Town Mill & Weir, & occupiers of the mill, complained that defts. were making a large new sewer in the principal street of the town, & other new sewers, which would open or drain into the river above the weir, & prayed for an injunction to restrain these acts. The evidence showed that defts. had made the large new sewer complained of nearly on the site of an old sewer, but larger & deeper, that several drains had been made into it which could not have been made into the old sewer, & that it was intended to make many more such drains; also that they were making other new sewers, which would drain into the river above the weir:—Injunction granted to restrain defts. from causing or permitting any sewer to be opened into the new sewer, or any other new sewer to open or drain into the river at any point above the Town Mill Weir.

(2) Defts. were empowered by their special Act from time to time, as they should think proper, to cleanse & otherwise improve the river, & for such purpose "to remove or alter" the Town Mill Weir. They had no compulsory powers of taking the weir, but they were empowered to purchase land by agreement, & the Act provided that full compensation should be made to all persons "sustaining any damage" by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of the Act. Defts., having entered upon the weir & removed part of the same, & having permanently occupied the space by a floodgate, pltfs., not alleging damage, prayed that defts. might be restrained from entering upon or continuing in possession of the weir, or any land or property of pltfs., or any part thereof, & from taking or using the same, without consent of pltfs. Injunction refused, & bill as to this part of the relief dismissed.—HOLT v. ROCHDALE CORPN. (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 354; 39 L. J. Ch. 761; 23 L. T. 43; 35 J. P. 6; 18 W. R. 885.

323. —— ——.]—(1) Upon an information filed by the A.-G. to restrain a public body from transgressing powers conferred by an Act of Parliament, it is not necessary to prove that injury to the public will result from the acts complained of; & in this respect there is no difference between an ex officio information & an information at the relation of a private individual. The Local Government, 1858 (Amendment) Act, 1861 (c. 61), s. 4, enables local boards to execute works without their districts for the purpose of the outfall or distribution of sewage, subject to the following proviso: "That nothing herein contained shall give or be construed to give power to any local board to construct or use any outfall, drain or sewer, for the purpose of conveying sewage or filthy water into any natural watercourse or stream until such sewage or filthy or refuse water be freed from all excrementitious or other foul or noxious matter, such as would affect or deteriorate the purity & quality of the water in such stream or watercourse:—Held: a local board was not entitled to discharge sewage by an outfall out of their district into a river so as to affect or deteriorate the water at the point of discharge.

(2) The C. local board discharged sewage into a river by an outfall out of their district so as to pollute the water at the point of discharge; but such pollution was imperceptible at the town of W., situated eight miles farther down, & supplied with water for domestic purposes from the river. Upon an information & bill filed by the local board of W., in whom the W. waterworks were vested, as relators & pltfs. seeking to restrain the C. local board from so discharging the sewage, on the grounds that these acts were an infringement of the above-mentioned provisions of Local Government Act, 1861, & nuisance to the inhabitants of W.:—Held: upon the information an injunction to restrain defts. from infringing the Act of Parliament must be granted with costs, but the bill which sought to make out a case of nuisance must be dismissed with costs.—A.-G. v. COCKERMOUTH LOCAL BOARD (1874), L. The Act stated that the N. co. shall not discharge sewage water into the river L. until after being purified by the best known process:—Held: the statutory provisions superseded all common law rights, the N. co., or its statutory assignees, were entitled to discharge the effluent water after being purified by the best process, & no action lay against the N. co. or assignees for polluting the river, though that process was still imperfect.—LEA CONSERVANCY BOARD v. HERTFORD CORPN. 327. Prohibition of pollution—River Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (c. 75)—"Wilfully permitting" sewage to flow.]—Defts., an urban sanitary authority, were charged under above Act, s. 3, with permitting sewage matter to flow into a stream within their district. It appeared that the sewage matter flowed from certain ancient sewers, within the district of & vested in defts., which had been constructed & which were used for discharging sewage matter into the stream before the passing of the Act, & before defts. were constituted a sanitary authority. Defts. had made certain alterations in these sewers, but had done nothing to increase the pollution of the stream:—Held: there was primâ facie evidence that defts. had "wilfully permitted" sewage matter to flow into the stream, & the mere fact that they had not materially altered the nature of the sewers, & had done nothing to increase the flow of sewage matter from such sewers into the stream, was not a suffi-

The pipes, sewage disposal works, effluent pipe, & ditch were all on private lands. The local authority had taken no part in the provision, construction, or management of the scheme, nor had they accepted any responsibility for same, & their sewerage system did not extend to the place in question. The effluent pipe & ditch were taken to be sewers within the meaning of Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), & as such vested in the local authority. Upon an information under sect. 92 of the local Act against the local authority for "suffering" the sewage to pass into the ditch communicating with the brook:—Held: as the local authority had done nothing, & the sewerage system had been constructed without their sanction, they did not "cause" or "suffer" the sewage to pass into the brook.—WALTHAM HOLY CROSS URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. LEE CONSERVANCY BOARD (1910), 103 L. 339. —— ——.]—(1) Public works ordered by Act of Parliament must be so executed as not to interfere with the private rights of individuals; & in deciding on the right of a single proprietor to an injunction to restrain such interference, the circumstance that a vast population will suffer, e.g. by remaining undrained, unless his rights are invaded, is one which this ct. cannot take into consideration.

The council of the borough of Birmingham were bound by a local Act of Parliament, incorporating the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 34), effectually to drain the town:—Held: (2) they were not justified in so carrying on their operations for this purpose as to drive away fish & prevent cattle from drinking of the water of a river at a part seven miles below the town & where it belonged to pltf.; (3) assuming the inhabitants of Birmingham to have had before their Act a right to drain their houses into the river, that circumstances would not authorise the council in discharging the sewage in such a manner as to subject pltf. to the inconvenience of which he now complained; (4) although pltf. had submitted to the injury for nearly four years, trusting to the assurance of the council that they were carrying out a scheme of sewage by which eventually the evil would be removed, he was not precluded on the ground of laches from now applying for an injunction, the rule in such cases being that the mere prospect of injury does not give a right to this relief.—A.-G. v. BIRMINGHAM BOROUGH COUNCIL (1858), 4 K. & J. 528; 22 J. A piece of land abutting on a navigable river was granted by the Crown to A., & by the grant the boundary on the river side was expressed to be a line "two chains distance from the shore," "parallel to the general course of the shore." A. conveyed to P., & P. conveyed to resp. In the conveyance to resp. the boundary was expressed to be "the water's edge of the river." Resp. used the land as a boat yard, & had for many years kept moored in the river opposite the land a large floating wharf, with a covered boat house upon it, which he used for the purposes of his business as a boatman for housing & mooring boats:—Held: (2) the possession following upon the conveyance had given to resp. a good primâ facie title to the whole of the space of two chains from the shore, & (3) he was entitled to maintain an action against applts. for wrongful acts which polluted the river & impeded the navigation, & obstructed the access to his wharf.—BOOTH v. RATTÉ (1890), 15 App. Cas. 188; 59 L. On the leakage being discovered by the railway co.'s servants, every effort was made by the railway co. to stop it. Pltfs. sued the oil co. & the railway co. for damages for nuisance arising from the pollution of the watercourse:—Held: (1) the oil co. were liable, as they ought by the exercise of reasonable care to have discovered the defective condition of the tank before consigning it by rail; (2) the railway company were not liable, as they did not in any way permit the continuance of the nuisance, & as the damage was caused by the wrongful act of a third party, namely, the oil co., in sending a defective tank to the railway co.'s premises.—SMITH v. GREAT WESTERN RY. 358. Necessity for notice—Disobedience to order of county court—Application for penalties.]—The Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (c. 75), s. 10, provides that the county ct. having jurisdiction in the place where any offence against the Act is committed may, by summary order, require any person to abstain from the commission of such offence. The sect. further enacts that any person making default in complying with any requirement of an order of a county ct. made in pursuance of the sect. shall pay to the person complaining such sum not exceeding £50 a day for every day during which he is in default & that such penalty shall be enforced in the same manner as any other debt judged to be due by the ct. Sect. 13 of the Act provides that proceedings shall not be taken under this Act for any offence against the Act until the expiration of two months after written notice of the intention to take such proceedings has been given to the offender.

In Jan. 1909, a county ct. judge made an order declaring that defts. were guilty of an offence against the Act in causing sewage pollution to flow into a river, & ordered them to abstain in the future from the commission of the offence. On June 10, 1910, an order was made for penalties against defts. for two defaults in complying with the order. On Oct. 17, 1913, an application was made to the county ct. for an order that defts. should be directed to pay further penalties for defaults against the order of 1909 committed on Aug. 1 & 6, 1915. A preliminary objection was taken by defts. that under sect. 13 of the Act two months' written notice of the application should have been given to them. The judge gave effect to this objection & declined to entertain the application:—Held: the judge was wrong, & the provisions of sect. 13 applied only when proceedings were taken for an offence against the Act, & not when an application was made for penalties upon the ground that an existing order of the ct. had been disobeyed.—WEST RIDING OF YORKSHIRE RIVERS BOARD v. HECKMONDWIKE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1914), 110 L. 363. —— —— ——.]—A waterworks co. were authorised by their private Act to take & use the water of certain springs which supplied a river upon the banks of which certain mills were situate. The Act provided that the co. should not abstract more than a certain amount of water before they had constructed a compensation reservoir for storing the water during floods for the benefit of the millowners. The Act gave the co. compulsory powers for acquiring land, streams, & springs for their undertaking, & powers to acquire by consent lands for constructing their compensation reservoir. The Act contained a reservation of the right of the owners & occupiers of any lands, mills, or works, to the use of the waters of the stream, except so far as provided & declared by the Act. Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), was incorporated with this Act. The co. constructed a compensation reservoir & a subsequent Act of Parliament, which gave them further powers, including powers of emptying & cleansing the reservoir, recognised this reservoir as a sufficient compensation reservoir for the millowners, & directed it to be maintained. The owner of some dye works situate on the river below the reservoir filed a bill against the co., complaining that the effect of the reservoir was to make the water of the river more muddy than it was before its construction, & to render it unfit for the process of dyeing, & praying for an injunction to restrain defts. from fouling the stream. These allegations being in the judgment of the ct. established:—Held: (1) the Acts gave defts. no power to foul the water; (2) the compensation clauses in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), did not apply, inasmuch as the injury was such as the co. were not authorised to commit; & pltf. was entitled to an injunction; (3) qu.: whether Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 17), gives compensation for injuries to the lands of third persons caused by works on land which could be taken only by consent.—CLOWES v. STAFFORDSHIRE POTTERIES WATERWORKS CO. 364. Indictment.]—A canal co. were empowered by an Act of Parliament to take the water of certain brooks & use it for the purposes of their canal; the water in one of the brooks at the time the Act passed was pure, but it afterwards became polluted by drains, etc., before it reached the canal, & it was then penned back in the canal, & became a public nuisance:—Held: that the co. were liable to be indicted for the nuisance, as there was nothing in the Act compelling them to take the water, or authorising them to use it so as to create a nuisance.—R. v. BRADFORD NAVIGATION CO. 365. Mandamus—Nuisance not actually caused by local authority—Authority guilty of neglect.]—A local board, under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), causing a nuisance by any act which, independently of the statute, would have given a cause of action to any person, may be made liable in damages, or be restrained by injunction, unless they can show a justification under the powers of the statute. But if a local board do no act themselves to cause a nuisance, but neglect to perform their duty of providing a satisfactory & healthy system of drainage, it is no ground of action by an individual for damages or an injunction, but the remedy is by prerorgative writ of mandamus; & semble: this jurisdiction, notwithstanding Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 25, ought not to be exercised except by the Q. B. D.

Defts. were a local board constituted in Nov. 1875, under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55). Pltf. complained that for some time before & since defts. became the sanitary authority, sewage was allowed to fall into a stream passing near his residence so as to pollute it & cause a nuisance to him. He complained to defts. in May, 1876, & nothing having been done he brought an action against them in July, 1876, for damages & an injunction:—Held: assuming that an actionable nuisance existed, as defts. had themselves done no act to create or increase it, pltf. had no cause of action.—GLOSSOP v. HESTON & ISLEWORTH LOCAL

367. —— Whether precluding remedy of injunction & damages.]—(1) Crude sewage was discharged by a local authority into the channel of an intermittent stream which ran in an old culvert through private land & then in the open air alongside that land to a tidal river, the stream itself being tidal up to the point where the sewage entered. The local authority had not interfered with the natural flow of the stream, which only ran during winter. In the summer the channel conveyed nothing but sewage with the exception of the tidal water with which it was diluted twice a day. Sewage was deposited on the banks of the open channel to such an extent as to constitute a public nuisance when the tide was out, & owing to the defective state of the culvert the land was constantly flooded with pent up sewage water at spring tides. In an action by the tenant of the land & the Att.-Gen. at his relation for damages & an injunction:—Held: the local authority were liable to an injunction restraining them from occasioning a nuisance by discharging crude sewage through the open channel, & from discharging it or permitting it to flow from the culvert or sewer on to the relator's land.

(2) Semble: although Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 299, provides a statutory remedy by complaint to the Local Government Board in the case of a local authority making default "in the maintenance of existing sewers" it does not preclude a private individual from obtaining damages & an injunction against the local authority in respect of a common law nuisance arising from that default.—A.-G. v. LEWES CORPN., [1911] 2 Ch. 495; 81 L. Before the expiration of the five years the sanitary authority of the corpn. was transferred by a local statute to a district drainage board. Pltfs. being desirous of enforcing their decree applied for leave to add the district drainage board as defts.:—Held: no amendment could be permitted after final decree.—A.-G. v. BIRMINGHAM CORPN. 369. Quia timet action.]—In order to maintain a quia timet action to restrain an apprehended injury pltf. must prove imminent danger of a substantial kind, or that the apprehended injury, if it does come, will be irreparable.

Pltf. was a manufacturer of paper, his mills being situate on the bank of a river, the water of which he used to a large extent in his process of manufacture for which it was essential that the water should be very pure. Defts. who were alkali manufacturers, were depositing on a piece of land close to the river, & about one mile and a half higher up than pltf.'s mills, a large heap of refuse from their works. It was proved that in the course of a few years a liquid of a very noxious character would flow from the heap, & would continue flowing for forty years or more, & that if this liquid should find its way into the river to any appreciable extent the water would be rendered unfit for pltf.'s manufacture, & his trade would be ruined. Pltf. did not allege that he had as yet sustained any actual injury. Defts. said that they intended to use all proper precautions to prevent the noxious liquid from getting into the river:—Held: it being quite possible by the use of due care, to prevent the liquid from flowing into the river, & it being also possible that, before it began to flow from the heap, some method of rendering it innocuous might have been discovered, the action could not be maintained, & must be dismissed with costs. But the dismissal was expressly declared to be without prejudice to the right of pltf. to bring another action hereafter, in case of actual injury or imminent danger.—FLETCHER v. BEALEY (1885), 28 Ch. Applts.' proprietary rights & the unpolluted flow of the water in the watercourse had been violated by resps. allowing noxious matter from their works to get into the stream, & would continue to be so violated unless the nuisance was stopped. In an action by applt. claiming an injunction & damages, the judge found that resps. had polluted the stream with oil, & salt water, but while he awarded £50 for accrued damages, with the right to sue for further damages from time to time, he held that it was not a case for an injunction :—Held : so far as the judgment below dealt with the question of damages it must be affirmed, but as the rights of applt. had been violated he was entitled also to an injunction. As, however, an injunction enforceable forthwith would inflict a loss on resps. out of all proportion to the applt.'s gain, the operation of the injunction would be suspended for two years in order to give resps. time to abate the nuisance.—STOLLMEYER v. PETROLEUM DEVELOPMENT CO., LTD., [1918] A. Upon an information being filed against the co. & their lessees, the co. by their answer admitting the polluted state of the water, but insisting on a right to use it, however foul, & saying they should probably continue to draw the water into their canal upon the expiration of the lease in Apr. 1866 :—Held : (1) the ct. being of opinion that the decision at law was correct, the fact of an appeal pending at law was no bar to an injunction, though it might influence the decision of the ct. as to the date at which the injunction should commence ; (2) it was no answer to the prayer for an injunction to say that the co. did not pollute the water, they having the power to draw it or not into their canal as they pleased ; (3) nor to say that the informants might be left to their legal remedies ; (4) nor to say that by restraining the co., a worse nuisance would be created in the stream : (5) no answer to the prayer for injunction to say the lessees were the active offenders, & not the co., inasmuch as the co. had set up their rights by their answer ; (6) nor that the co. might be obliged to close their canal, & expose themselves to an indictment on that ground ; & injunction ordered ; to commence eight months after the date of the decree.—A.-G. v. BRADFORD CANAL PROPRIETORS (1866), L. 385. So far as possible.]—An action was brought against a sanitary authority to restrain the pollution of a ditch running through the main street of a town past pltf.'s lands into the sea. The ditch was covered over as it passed through the town, but was afterwards an open stream, & had been for many years seriously polluted. Pltf. claimed an injunction to restrain defts., as the owners of the covered part of the ditch & as the sanitary authority of the district, from permitting any sewage or other noxious matter to come on to her lands or into her part of the ditch. In 1877 the attention of deft. was called to the condition of the houses in two new streets, & they required the owners of those houses to improve their drains. The owners accordingly ran two drains down the two streets & made communications with the main sewer. These drains were made for the purpose of carrying off surface water, & were not connected with any privies, but in addition to the surface water the slops of the houses were allowed to be thrown down the drains. In 1885, in consequence of a complaint made to defts., notices were directed to be served upon the occupiers to divert all polluting matter from the sewer, & the inspector of nuisances was ordered to inspect all drains entering into the main sewer. The notices so served were all effective in causing an abatement of the nuisance except four. Subsequent directions of defts. as to cleansing the sewer were duly carried out, the effect of which was to diminish the pollution of it to some extent. The defence was, that defts. had done everything in their power to prevent any nuisance from being occasioned to pltf. or her property; & they were not responsible for the nuisance:—Held: defts. had done all they could to abate the nuisance of which pltf. complained, & were not responsible for it; but pltf.'s remedy, if any, was against the persons who actually caused the nuisance; therefore, the action could not be maintained.—OGILVIE v. BLYTHING UNION RURAL SANITARY AUTHORITY (1892), 67 L. 387. —— Between trial of action & appeal—Injunction discharged.]—The judge, having granted at the instance of the A.-G. a perpetual injunction restraining a public drainage board from discharging sewage water into a river in contravention of Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 17, defts. appealed. Upon the appeal defts. did not contest that the injunction was properly granted on the facts existing at the trial, but they obtained successive adjournments of the appeal to enable them to complete certain sewage works upon which they were engaged in order to comply with the sect. On the completion of the works, there being a conflict of evidence as to their sufficiency, the ct. referred the matter to an expert to report, & he reported that the sewage effluents from defts.' works which entered the river after treatment by the process in use at the date of his report were at that date to such an extent freed from excrementitious & other foul or noxious matters that they did not affect or deteriorate the purity of the water in the river. The ct. then, being of opinion that there was no longer any breach of the sect., discharged the injunction upon defts. undertaking to use their best endeavours to prevent any future breach; defts. to pay the costs of the appeal:—Held: although the ct. had jurisdiction to discharge the injunction, it ought not in the exercise of its jurisdiction to have accepted, in lieu of the injunction, an undertaking in the limited form above stated, & the House substituted for this undertaking an undertaking by defts., that the existing results, as described in the report of the expert, should in future be maintained; defts. to pay three-fourths of the costs of the appeal to the House.—A.-G. v. BIRMINGHAM, TAME & REA

393. Jurisdiction of justices—Over person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance nuisance arises—Direction to abate nuisance.]—By Nuisances Removal Act, 1854 (c. 121), s. 12, in any case where a nuisance, a term, which includes ditches & drains injurious to health, is ascertained by the local authority to exist, they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a justice of the peace, & the justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or is continued, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before any two justices, who shall proceed to inquire into the complaint, & if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, shall make an order on such person, owner or occupier, for the abatement, discontinuance & prohibition of the nuisance. By sect. 13 the justices may require the person upon whom the order is made to drain, empty, cleanse, fill up, amend or remove the injurious ditch, drain, etc. The occupiers of a brewery had for upwards of twenty years discharged the refuse from it into a barrel drain, which, after passing along a turnpike road, entered land belonging to another proprietor. The proprietor of this land did not get rid of the refuse as his predecessors had done, & it became after it had reached his land a nuisance:—Held: the occupier of the brewery was a person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance was caused, & an order of justices directing him to abate the nuisance by cutting off all communication between the drains of his premises & the barrel drain was valid.—BROWN v. BUSSELL, FRANCOMB v. FREEMAN (1868), L. 396. Discharge of refuse into overflow sewer — Sewer used as conduit pipe.]—The liquid refuse from a manufactory was carried away in a wooden trough. Prior to 1878 this trough had discharged direct into the river Aire. In 1878 the trough was shortened in order to make room for an iron pipe erected by the local authority, & was made to discharge into the iron pipe. The authority erected this iron pipe to form a continuation of an "overflow" sewer or culvert with the object of discharging the contents thereof into the river at a point rather lower down the river than that at which the culvert originally discharged. The culvert or "overflow" sewer was generally dry, but on some thirty days in the year it took storm water mixed with sewage, which the ordinary sewers in a neighbouring street could not deal with. The manufacturers were fined for discharging refuse into the river:—Held: the conviction must be upheld.

397. Grounds for refusal to convict — Negotiations between parties.]—Applts., in Jan. 1902, gave notice to resps. to discontinue the flow of sewage into a tributary of the river Lee, within the district of the respondents. Negotiations were entered into between applts. & resps., & meanwhile the sewage was permitted to flow into the tributary as before. On Nov. 1, 1904, resps. were served with a summons for failing to comply with the notice. Before the hearing of the summons measures were taken by resps. to discontinue the flow of sewage. The hearing of the summons was adjourned for six months, & finally came on on May 25, 1905, when the magistrates dismissed the information, having regard to the negotiations between the parties subsequent to the service of the notice, & the steps taken by resps. subsequent to the service of the summons:—Held: (1) the fact that there had been negotiations between the parties did not justify the justices in refusing to convict, & the case must go back for their further consideration; (2) although, primâ facie, the discharge of sewage into a river cannot be regarded as a trivial offence within Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 16, yet, if the evidence before the justices on the rehearing appeared to them to warrant their so doing, it would be open to them to act under that sect., but they must not allow their judgment to be influenced by the fact that there had been negotiations between the parties.—LEE CONSERVANCY BOARD v. BISHOP'S STORTFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1906), 70 J. 399. Liability of local board—Control of sewers handed over to joint committee.]—Two local sanitary authorities appointed a joint drainage committee consisting of members from each board, & gave to such joint committee the exclusive control & management of the sewage & sewage works, & henceforth the disposal & treatment of the sewage of both districts were carried out under the control of the committee. The sewerage works continued to remain the property of the local board to which the works belonged prior to the appointment of the said joint committee. Sewage or other offensive or injurious matter was allowed to flow from the said sewerage works into an adjoining river, thereby polluting it. The Conservancy Board thereupon served a notice in writing upon the local board to which the sewerage works belonged to discontinue the flow of sewage into the river. The local board having failed to comply with the terms of the notice were summoned before the magistrates to compel them to discontinue the nuisance, or to render them liable to the penalty for not doing so:—Held: the local board were not liable, as they had ceased to have the control over the sewers, & so could not have "caused" or "suffered" the outflow into the river.—LEA CONSERVANCY BOARD v. TOTTENHAM LOCAL BOARD (1891), 64 L. Defts. claimed a right to use the water of the stream for the purposes of their works, & denied that they were substantially diminishing the flow of water or polluting the stream except occasionally & accidentally. On the evidence:—Held: defts. were dealing unreasonably with the water of the stream, so as visibly & materially to diminish the quantity of water coming down & also polluting the water; & pltfs. were therefore entitled to succeed, even without proof of actual damage, on the general principles of law as to the rights of riparian owners.—SHARP v. WILSON, ROTHERAY & CO. Deft. diverted a stream as it passed through his premises, but restored it undiminished as to the quantity of water to its former channel before it reached the premises of pltf. Deft. also employed the stream, while on his premises, in a way which rendered the water unfit for ordinary use, but he alleged that the water, by the time it reached pltf.'s lands, was freed to the utmost possible extent from any noxious ingredients with which it had become impregnated; & it did not appear that any actual damage was sustained by pltf. After various proceedings, in Feb. 1889, a supplemental writ was issued by leave of the ct., & a statement of claim was delivered asking for an injunction & also damages, including such as had been occasioned by the failure of the local board to comply with the interlocutory injunction:—Held: applying the principle that where there was jurisdiction to grant an injunction, damages might be given in lieu for injury, the injunction would not be continued; but there must be judgment against defts. for the moneys found to be due from them to pltfs. at the trial.—WARWICK & BIRMINGHAM CANAL NAVIGATION CO. v. BURMAN (1890), 63 L. The Improvement Comrs. of H., who had adopted the Local Government Act & thereby were constituted the local board of health for H., commenced a system of drainage for H. in 1862, & the sewage flowing through the C. stream into the O. B. polluted its waters so that they could not be used for bleaching purposes. In 1868 W. filed his bill, praying for an injunction to restrain the comrs. from permitting the sewage to flow into the O. B. The suit was compromised & by an agreement, dated Mar. 1, 1869, the comrs. agreed to pay W. a certain sum for damages & that they would not, after Mar. 31, permit the sewage of H. to flow through the drains under their control into the O. B. The comrs. adopted the irrigation system of the disposal of their sewage, which proved wholly inadequate. Sewage flowed down the C. stream into the O. B. & also the overflow from the irrigation farm. W. was obliged to take other bleaching works, as the waters of the O. B. were so polluted by the drainage that he could not use them. He therefore filed his bill against the comrs., praying for an injunction in the terms of the agreement, & for an inquiry as to damages sustained by him. Relying on the performance of the agreement, W. took a new lease of the bleaching works:—Held: W. was entitled to an injunction, & an inquiry as to damages as prayed by his bill.—WOOD v. HIGH & LOW HARROGATE IMPROVEMENT COMRS. Measure of damages—Depreciation of property.]—Pltf. was owner of two dye works, which were situated upon the banks of the river, & which had carried on flourishing businesses, until the construction of a reservoir by defts. higher up the river. The consequence of the construction of the reservoir was that a deposit of mud was formed at the bottom of it, which escaping into the river so fouled it that the water became unfit for use in pltf.'s works, & the business consequently fell off until pltf. was obliged to tell the works very much below their former value. Pltf. brought an action which was tried before the Chief Baron at the last Stafford assizes, when his lordship directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, & the jury awarded £400 for damages & £1,000 for the depreciation of the property. On motion for a new trial:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover anything for the depreciation of his property, & the rule must be made absolute for a new trial, unless he would consent to reduce his damages to the £400 lawfully recoverable.—TATTON v. STAFFORDSHIRE POTTERIES WATERWORKS CO. (1879), 44 J. P. 106.

418. —— Loss of amenities.]—The river Derwent was polluted by sewage from (a) old sewers into which householders of Derby had for more than twenty years discharged their sewage; (b) sewers inherited by defts., the corpn. of Derby, from their predecessors, into which householders had by virtue of their statutory rights made connections; (c) sewers laid by defts. themselves; (d) additional sewage arising from the conversion of privies into water-closets under directions given by defts. Pltfs. owned Elvaston Castle & estate situated on the river about 5½ miles below Derby & brought this action for an injunction to restrain the defts. from polluting the river so as to cause a nuisance; damages for the silting up of a lake fed from the river by a watercourse which had to be stopped up in 1902; the loss of a water wheel which had been worked by the watercourse, & the expense of replacing it by an engine; pollution to a well into which water percolated from the lake; depreciation of a house on the bank of the river & to the castle; the expense of obtaining a new water supply; & for injury to the fishing. In 1898 an order was made in the Derbyshire county ct., in an action brought by the county council, that defts. should abstain from polluting the river contrary to the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (c. 75). By a private Act, defts obtained the necessary powers, & they had now commenced to construct sewerage works for the whole of their area:—Held: (1) inasmuch as the householders had obtained in the first two classes of sewage prescriptive rights which could not be interfered with by defts., an order had been made under Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (c. 75), & defts. were taking steps to remove the nuisance, no injunction ought to be granted; (2) the action would not lie against defts. for nonfeasance or neglect of duty under the Public Health Acts; pltfs.' remedy against them in that respect was by complaint to the Local Government Board under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 299; sect. 17 of that Act must be read only as a proviso; & sect. 19 did not apply to the present case; (3) the action would lie against defts. for damage caused by acts which they had done themselves; this did not make defts. liable for the whole of the damage; (4) pltfs. could recover damages for the expense of procuring a new water supply & engine, & for the injury to the house & the fishing; (5) they could not recover for injury to the amenities of the castle nor for the silting up of the lake, for they ought to have excluded the water when they found it was polluted.—HARRINGTON (EARL) v. DERBY CORPN., [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 74 L. In the exercise of their power under the Act they erected staunches in the river, & the result of these, combined with the natural growth of the weeds in the river, & the accumulation of silt against the staunches, was that the river overflowed its banks, & damaged pltf.'s land :—Held : there was no obligation on defts. to cut the weeds or dredge the silt unless it was necessary to do so for the benefit of the navigation, & pltf.'s remedy, if any, was not by action against them for not doing so, but by applying for compensation under the Act.—CRACKNELL v. THETFORD CORPN. 429. —— ——.]—By a Local Act of 1859, s. 7, the Corpn. of York were authorised to abandon the navigation of the river Foss, which they had previously purchased, to alter the channel, & to remove locks or works connected with the navigation ; but before removing any locks the corpn. were to make due provision for the escape or disposal of the water held up by such locks or theretofore accustomed to flow along or into the channel of the navigation, so as to prevent the same from overflowing or otherwise damaging the adjacent lands. By sect. 19, the corpn. at their own expense were to make, & for the period of five years maintain, such arches, drains, & passages as should in consequence of any alteration of the navigation be necessary & sufficient to convey the water from the lands adjoining the navigation into the river. The corpn. abandoned the navigation & made alterations, the effect of which was that, if the channel remained in the state it then was, due provision was made for the escape of the water. They, however, took no measures to prevent the navigation from becoming silted up & choked with weeds, & in consequence the land adjoining the river about a mile above the alterations was flooded during an extraordinary rainfall, & the grass was damaged :—Held : the corpn. were not responsible for this damage.—HODGSON v. YORK CORPN. 430. —— ——.]—A local Act of Parliament incorporated certain persons for the purpose of securing a regular & proper supply of water to millowners whose works were situated on the banks of the river B. These persons had powers given them to collect the waters of several small streams into a reservoir, &, as often as necessary, to send down those waters to the B. through the channel of a stream called M. Clause 2 of the Act directed them to "make, erect, construct, maintain, repair, & keep," by means of a reservoir, a due & adequate supply of water for the river B. at all seasons of the year, & to enter on the lands of the different streams named, to do what was necessary for the conveyance & due regulation of the supply of such waters, & "to make, erect, alter, maintain, repair, widen, deepen, scour, cleanse, & keep proper & sufficient conduits, aqueducts, channels, & watercourses, drains, feeders, weirs, dams," etc. Clause 82 gave similar directions, & ordered that the surplus water should be returned into the different streams from which it had been taken, & also made provisions for supplying with water the cattle depasturing in fields adjoining.

The persons incorporated under the Act erected the reservoir, collected the waters of the different streams, & sent them through the channel of the M. to supply the B., but, after a time, neglected to cleanse the channel of the M. so that at times it overflowed its banks & did damage to the lands of the adjoining proprietors :—Held : under the words of the Act there was an obligation on the persons so incorporated to take care that the due execution of the works & operations intended by the Act, should not be injurious to the lands lying along the banks of the M., & the bed or channel of the M. must be cleansed & kept in a proper state for the flow & reflow of the water that had to pass through it.—GEDDIS v. BANN RESERVOIR (PROPRIETORS) (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430, H. The ct. will reluctantly interfere with a co.'s discretion where amongst engineers there may be a difference of opinion; but as it appeared that the damage complained of by pltf. might be avoided by certain alterations of the co.'s works, suggested by an eminent engineer to whom the matter was referred by the ct., which alterations the co. said they would have made if suggested before suit, the ct. decreed the making thereof.—MOORE v. GRAND RIVER NAVIGATION CO. 443. —— ——.]—By a public Act, the predecessors in title of defts. were empowered, as undertakers of the river D. navigation, to clear, scour, & deepen the river, & to lay dredgings taken from it on the banks or lands adjacent to the places where the same should be taken out, giving satisfaction to the owners of such lands, for any damage thereby occasioned. The Act appointed a number of persons, therein named, as comrs. for settling, determining & adjusting in manner thereinafter mentioned all matters of difference between the undertakers & their successors & the owners of adjacent lands, & provided that such comrs. should have power to determine what satisfaction such landowners should have for the damage done to their lands by the exercise of the statutory powers given to the undertakers. The Act empowered any fifteen or more comrs. assembled together to elect new comrs. in the places of any comrs. who should be dead or refuse to act. All the original comrs. were dead & no comrs. appointed in their places, if any, were in existence:—Held: a landowner whose land had been damaged by the exercise by defts. of the statutory power to lay on his land things taken from the river, was entitled to have the amount of compensation for such damage assessed in an action.—BENTLEY v. MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD & LINCOLNSHIRE RY. In consequence of the negligent construction of the gates & sluices, the waters of the river flowed into the cut, &, bursting its western bank, flooded the adjoining lands. Pltf. & other owners of lands on the east side of the cut closed the lower end of the culvert, which prevented the waters overflowing their lands to any considerable extent; but the occupiers of the lands on the west side, believing that the stoppage of the culvert would be injurious to their lands, re-opened it, & so let the waters through on to pltf.'s land to a much greater extent:—Held: the comrs. were responsible for the entire damage thus caused to pltf.'s land.—COLLINS v. MIDDLE LEVEL COMRS. Sect. 43 enacted that "in the execution of this Act the comrs. shall do as little damage as may be, &, subject to the provisions of this Act, shall make to all parties entitled, compensation for all damage or injury so done." By sect. 45 it was provided that "full compensation shall from time to time, after the passing of this Act, but not beyond twenty years after the completion of the" works, be made by defts. "to the owners, lessees & occupiers for the time being, sustaining any damage by reason, or in any way consequential upon, the exercise of any of the powers of this Act, of the lands & hereditaments of" F., "& in case of dispute as to the amount of such compensation, the same shall be settled by arbn. in the manner provided" in Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 18). The Local Act incorporated Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 18):—Held: the compensation clauses in the Special Act did not extend to any damage, except such as would have been the proper subject of compensation under Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 18), viz., damage which in the absence of the statutory powers would have given a right of action to the party injured.—RHODES v. AIREDALE DRAINAGE COMRS. 448. —— ——.]—The tenant of a market garden situate in an outlying district of the city of Edinburgh, & forming part of the C. estate, sued the corpn. for damage done to his garden by flooding on two occasions in 1909. A natural stream, which for a long period had carried part of the sewage of the burgh, flowed in an open channel through some flat meadow land in an easterly direction until it reached a public road, which was under the control & management of the corpn., & which formed the western boundary of pursuer's garden. It then passed under this road through a culvert & flowed past the garden. The culvert had been partially blocked up by a water main inserted across the top of it by permission of the corpn. as the road authority. On the occasions complained of there was an exceptionally heavy rainfall, &, owing to the insufficiency of the culvert to carry the water of the stream, it was dammed back on to the meadow land until it rose about the level of the road & rushed through the pursuer's garden gate, which was at the lowest point of the road, on to the garden, causing serious damage thereto. The corpn. were under a statutory obligation to provide adequate sewers for the sufficient drainage of the burgh. When the district in question was taken into the burgh by virtue of a local Act passed in 1900, a clause was inserted for the protection of the proprietors of the C. estate forbidding the corpn. to injuriously affect the irrigation of lands on the estate, or to diminish or intercept the supply of sewage water for such irrigation, or to deepen, cover over, divert, or otherwise interfere with the stream passing through the estate, except upon obtaining an order of the sheriff sanctioning such interference in the public interest:—Held: this clause did not absolve the corpn. from their statutory obligation to provide

449. —— Dock company.]—A dock co. were authorised by their special Act to make & maintain a dock & works connected therewith according to the levels defined in certain plans & sections deposited with the clerk of the peace. The dock communicated with the river Thames by an artificial channel, through which the water was admitted. The sections showed the retaining bank of the dock & channel at an uniform height of 4 feet above Trinity high-water mark. The level of the surrounding country was some feet below Trinity high-water mark, the river being kept from overflowing by means of a river wall 4 feet 2 inches above Trinity high-water mark. The co. allowed their retaining bank to be at one point several inches below the level of four feet. In Nov. 1875, an extraordinary high tide took place, & the river rose to 4 feet 5 inches above Trinity high-water mark, in consequence of which the water in the dock overflowed the bank & damaged the property of a neighbouring landowner. The tide had never been known to rise so high before, but in Mar. 1874, it had risen to 4 feet above Trinity high-water mark. On that occasion there was a small overflow from the dock, but no damage was done to the neighbouring landowner. Previously to that the tide had never risen above 3 feet 4 inches, & the water had never overflowed from the dock:—Held: (1) on the construction of the Act, the co. were bound to keep their bank up to the level of 4 feet above Trinity high-water mark, & were liable to pltfs. for breach of their statutory duty in not doing so; (2) independently of the Act, defts. were bound as riparian owners to keep the bank up to the level of 4 feet 2 inches, the height of the rest of the river wall, & that they were liable to pltfs. for negligence in not doing so; (3) the extraordinary high tide of Nov. 1875, although an act of God, did not excuse defts. from their liability; but they ought to have an opportunity of showing that the damage done by the act of God & the damage done through their negligence ought to be apportioned.—NITRO-PHOSPHATE & ODAM'S CHEMICAL MANURE CO. v. LONDON & ST. The Countess is proprietrix of lands situated below the site of one of the reservoirs, & during an extraordinary rainfall a great quantity of water was continuously discharged from the reservoir, through a waste weir into the watercourse of a burn, & did much damage to the Countess's lands. She claimed compensation. There was no failure or insufficiency of the works & no negligence:—Held: on the construction of the above clause the Countess was entitled to compensation for damage by flood waters from the reservoir, no matter how caused.—ROTHES (COUNTESS) v. KIRKCALDY WATERWORKS COMRS. During the progress of the work, flood water flowed through the gap caused by the removal of the timbers, doing damage to adjoining premises. By reason of the culvert, the water brought down by the stream was not carried off, but overflowed pltf.'s land. The stream was the natural drain for the surrounding country, but defts. used it to a small extent for the drainage of the town. the bottom of a narrow valley traversed by a stream on the banks of which were the mills of pltfs. The greater part of the hill was covered with loose shale from the weathering of the shale which was the foundation of the hill. No precise way was laid down in the statute for constructing the road, nor were the exact provisions prescribed which should be made or maintained for dealing with water & shale. The road had to be cut deep into the side of the hill, & the natural & obvious effect of making such a road was that it acted as a catchwater for the rain water from the upper slopes, which would otherwise have flowed on to the parts of the hill below the site of the road. It also caught the loose shale carried down by the water flowing over the slopes of the hill, & it was necessary to provide for the water & shale coming from above which would thus be intercepted by the road. For this purpose the contract & plans originally made certain provisions which, with modifications from time to time, were carried out. On July 1, 1914, heavy rains fell, & water & vast quantities of shale flowed over the road to the valley beneath, & into pltfs.' mills & upon their land. At the trial of the action for damages the judge found on the evidence that (a) insufficient precision was made for carrying off the water & shale; (b) that defts. had not exercised reasonable care in maintaining the works intended for dealing with the water & the shale:—Held: on the findings of fact the corpn. were liable on the ground of misfeasance, & the damage was not caused by the act of God, but could have been provided against by reasonable care & skill.—BALDWIN'S, LTD. v. HALIFAX CORPN. 455. Whether publici juris—Presumption against exclusive rights.]—In the sea, out of the reach of cannon shot universal use is presumed. In rivers flowing through conterminous states, a common use to the different states is presumed. Yet in both of these there may by legal possibility, exist a peculiar property, excluding the universal or the common use. Portions of the sea are prescribed for; so are rivers flowing through contiguous states, the banks on one side may have been first settled, by which the possession & property may have been acquired, or cessions may have taken place upon conquests or other events. But the general presumption bears strongly against such exclusive rights, & the title is a matter to be established, on the part of those claiming under it, in the same manner as all other legal demands are to be substantiated, by clear & competent evidence (SIR WILLIAM SCOTT).—THE TWEE GEBROEDERS (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 336; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 323; 165 E. R. 485.

457. How far property in bed of sea vested in Crown.]—What in the absence of all evidence of particular usage is the limit of the title of the Crown to the sea shore. The Crown is clearly in such a case, according to all the authorities, entitled to the littus moris as well as to the soil of the sea itself adjoining the coasts of England. . . . The medium tides therefore of each quarter of the tidal period afford a criterion which we think best adopted. It is true of the limit of the shore reached by these tides that it is more frequently reached & covered by the tide than left uncovered by it. For about three days it is left short & on one day it is reached. This point of the shore therefore is about four days in every week, i.e. for the most part of the year, reached & covered by the tides; & as some not indeed perfectly accurate construction, but approximate, must be given to the words "highest ordinary tides" used by Mr. Justice Holroyd, we think, after fully considering it, that this best fulfils the rules & the reasons for it, given in our books.

We therefore beg to advise your Lordship that, in our opinion, the average of these medium tides in each quarter of a lunar revolution during the year gives the limit, in the absence of all usage, to the rights of the Crown on the seashore (ALDERSON, B.).—A.-G. v. CHAMBERS (1854), 4 De G. The exact dimensions of each side of the plot were then given as well as its area, & it was stated that the plot was bounded on the south by other land of the grantor, on the east & north respectively by specified roads, & "on the west by the seashore." Reference was then made to a plan indorsed on the deed. The plan showed the dimensions as stated in the description:—Held: (1) the word "seashore" must be taken to mean the "foreshore" in its strict legal sense, i.e. the land situate between medium high & low water-marks; (2) the land between the plot & the foreshore did not pass to the grantee, but the grantor was estopped from saying that the land to the west of the plot was anything but "seashore" & the grantee was entitled to free & unrestricted access to the sea from every part of his western frontage over every part of the land lying between that frontage & the sea.

SUB-SECT. 3.—ACCRETION AND ENCROACHMENT.

A. In General.

476. The rule as to accretion—Gradual, slow & imperceptible.]—The recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the accretion is due to the nominal action of physical forces. In the English rule—namely, that it must be, "gradual, slow, & imperceptible"—the two last words are only qualifications of the word "gradual," & that word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied.—SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. VIZIANAGARAM (RAJA) (1921), L. R. 49 Ind. App. 67.

477. —— Meaning of "imperceptible."]—Considering the word "imperceptible" in this issue, as connected with the words "slow & gradual," we think it must be understood as expressive only of the manner of the accretion . . . & as meaning imperceptible in its progress, not imperceptible after a long lapse of time (ABBOTT, C.J.).—R. v. YARBOROUGH (LORD) (1824), 3 B. & C. 91; 4 Dow. & Ry. 491. ——.]—(1) Resps. were in occupation of lands on the shore of the island of Lagos, & there carried on business as African merchants. The lands had originally been granted by native grants to resps.' predecessors in title, who in 1861 had obtained Crown grants. All the grants described the lands as bounded by the sea. About 1860 a wharf & two piers had been built upon the foreshore. At various dates subsequent to the Crown grants resps. had carried out works on the foreshore to prevent incursion by the sea & erosion. Owing to these works a strip of land had been reclaimed below that which in 1861 had been high water mark. Resps. had built stores & sheds upon the reclaimed land & had for a period of from thirty to fifty years used it, together with the land granted & the piers & wharf, for the purposes of their businesses & had had exclusive possession. The Govt. of the island had knowledge of the reclamation & of the building upon & use of the reclaimed land:—Held: the reclaimed land, not being the result of natural accretion, vested in the Crown as owner of the foreshore, but resps. continued to have the right of riparian owners over the foreshore, & there was to be presumed in resps.' favour an irrevocable licence from the Crown to erect buildings & to store goods upon the reclaimed land & to use it generally for the purposes of their businesses.

It need no longer be matter of doubt that the operation of the rule of adding to the ownership of riparian lands the property of the soil ad medium filum is not interfered with on account of a specific or scheduled measurement of the land, a delineation or colouring on a plan, which measurement, delineation, or colouring does not in fact include any part of the bed of the river or of the street. Similarly in their Lordships' opinion, properties scheduled or specifically measured but in fact abutting on the seashore are not excluded from the operation of the rule which adds to riparian lands the increment which is caused by natural & gradual accretion from the sea.

Artificial reclamation & natural silting up are, however, extremely different in their legal results; the latter, if gradual & imperceptible in the sense already described, becomes an addition to the property of the adjoining land; the former has not this result, & the property of the original foreshore thus suddenly altered by reclamatory work upon its remains as before, i.e. in cases like the present, with the Crown.

Further, as far as the Crown is concerned, it is recognised by law that it is the duty of the Crown to protect land from the incursions of the sea, & if, in the circumstances of the present case, a licence had been granted & duly recorded to resps. to reclaim as was done, that licence would have been in entire accord not only with the right of the subject but with this duty of the Crown (per CUR.).

(2) It appears from the case of Lyon v. Fishmongers' Company, No. 856, post, that the frontage owner has foreshore rights annexed to his land beyond such rights as he possesses as one of the public.

The reclamation of foreshore by the Crown or a third party would have no effect on the riparian rights of the frontagers, so that the frontagers' rights may exist even after the land has ceased to be subject to the flow & reflow of the tide (per CUR.).—A.-G. 516. ——.]—In an action by the lord of a manor for trespass, in taking shellfish & shingle on the foreshore of the manor, between high & low water mark, his title being under a royal grant of the manor, with anchorage & groundage, but with no express mention of the shore:—Held: (1) this grant afforded of itself a presumption that it included the soil of the shore.

The soil between high & low water mark, that which is left dry by the ebb of the tide, & which is covered by the full tide, is presumed to be in the Crown, unless the Crown at some time or other has parted with it. There are some manors that remain in the Crown, that are the property of the Crown, as in Cornwall; but in the great majority of cases the right to the foreshore between high & low water mark is in the lord of the manor (ERLE, C.J.).

(2) An earlier grant from the Crown to a corpn., of rights of anchorage, groundage, & ballast over the shore of the locus in quo, would not weigh much against positive evidence of the exercise of rights of ownership over the shore by pltf.'s ancestors, under the grant of the manor.

Where there is the grant of anchorage, groundage & wreck of the sea . . . there is a strong presumption in law that by the grant of a manor with those terms annexed the soil of the sea shore was intended to pass (ERLE, C.J.).

In respect of anchorage there is what we in law consider to be a direct interference with the soil, letting go an anchor that penetrates into the soil & alters the surface; but that is not conclusive (ERLE, C.J.).

If you grant the right of groundage in any of the ways in which the ground may be required for purposes of navigation . . . if it is a district where the tide goes out & the vessel lies between high & low water mark, there would be the use of the soil

PART II. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 4.—A. b. Right to complain of encroachments.]—A private party has no title to complain of encroachments on the seashore; that being inter regalia, the Crown alone can do so.—CAMERON & GUNN v. AINSLIE (1848), 10 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 446; 20 Sc. Jur. 139.—SCOT.

for the ship that is to ground, & the person who is to have the payment for that groundage is presumed to have a right to the soil (ERLE, C.J.).

In respect of the right of wreck, things thrown up by the sea, coming with the rise of the tide & left upon the shore when the tide goes out, the person who has the grant of the wreck of the sea must go down upon the shore to collect that wreck, & therefore it is that that has been taken to be very good evidence on which the jury is justified in presuming that the Crown, in granting a manor with those additional rights, intended to grant the foreshore of the manor wherever those rights were to be exercised (ERLE, C.J.).

(3) Evidence of such acts of ownership as licences to take shingle, etc., was receivable, to support the presumption of a grant of the soil of the shore.

We are told that thirteen years ago jetties were run out for 100 yards, beginning from the top of the bank & running out into the sea. No doubt that is not so direct an exercise of an act of ownership as the taking such profit as the land affords, but it is good evidence for the jury to attend to (ERLE, C.J.).

It is a very strong piece of evidence that a person was sued by pltf. in an action of trespass for taking the mussels, & that when the law was to be brought in force against him he paid £5 & agreed to pay a royalty to [pltf.] for all the cart loads of mussels that he should take away (ERLE, C.J.).—LE STRANGE v. ROWE (1866), 4 F. & F. 1048.

520. Ownership in particular places—Duchy of Lancaster—Effect of immediate grant in fee of property already subject to lease.]—If the King make a grant which cannot take effect according to its terms, it must be concluded that he has been deceived in his grant, & it is void. Where, therefore, wreck was conveyed by lease for a term of year, which had not expired; if such lease be not recited in a grant conveying an immediate estate in fee to the grantees, such grant is void, because the King having already leased the right of possession, he cannot convey the same right to another, & all leases from the King must be enrolled.

Although the King holds lands as Duke of Lancaster, he holds them as King also; & the prerogative & privileges of the King belong to him with reference to those lands, as they do with respect to those which belong to him immediately in right of his Crown; therefore, a grant under the Duchy seal is subject to all the incidents of a grant from the Crown.—ALCOCK v. COOK (1829), 5 Bing. 340; 2 Moo. & P. 625; 2 State Tr. On one side of the bay was the northern side of an estate called Lipson Ground, forming an irregular declivity, in parts perpendicular, & in parts sloping down to the seashore & overgrown with brushwood & old trees. The co. in embanking the bay, made a drain on this side, in the same direction with the cliff, cutting through it in parts, but leaving several recesses of small extent between the projecting points. i. In General.

558. Necessity for strong case.]—(1) The soil of the seashore, between high & low water mark belongs not to the lords of the adjoining manor, but is vested in the Crown.

(2) A grant to the lords of the manor to take wrecks, merely gives them, as an incident, the right of passing over the soil between high & low water mark, but not the property in it.

(3) It must be a very strong case of prescription, to induce the ct. to think that there has been a grant of that part of the sea shore; & the circumstances, of the lords occasionally making grants of the wastes, or taking a toll for the capstans, or permitting the sand to be carried away, will not be sufficient to lead them to that conclusion.—DICKENS & KEMP v. SHAW (1823), 1 L. 559. Sufficiency of possession—Depends on circumstances of particular case.]—Pursuer brought an action to establish his title as against defenders & the Crown to the foreshore of the sea ex adverso land of which he was the proprietor. He claimed under a grant of feu made to his ancestor in 1801, which described the property granted as land bounded by the sea, but he did not endeavour to show that the grantor had an express title from the Crown. He, however, endeavoured to establish his right to the foreshore by prescriptive possession following on his own title, & (inter alia), adduced evidence to show that his predecessor in 1827 built a retaining wall upon a portion of the foreshore; that he & his predecessors had taken stone & sand from the shore; & that they & their tenants had exclusively carted away the drift sea ware. The Crown on the other hand adduce evidence to show that stones & sand were taken from the shore to build a harbour, & that the villagers had carried away in creels drift sea ware —Held: notwithstanding the absence of an express title in the superior, pursuer had given sufficient proof that he & his predecessors had been in possession of the foreshore in question for the prescriptive period.

It is, . . . practically impossible to lay down any precise rule in regard to the character & amount of possession necessary in order to give a riparian proprietor a prescriptive right to foreshore. When pltf. first went into occupation there existed a sewer, which had been made by the rural sanitary authority of the district for disposing of the sewage of the town of E., & which had its outfall into the sea in the neighbourhood of the oyster storage beds. Subsequently deft. urban district council became the sanitary authority of the district, & they extended the system of drainage by making new sewers which connected with the old sewer, & caused the discharge at the outfall to be greatly increased. The oyster storage beds & the oysters therein having become contaminated by sewage matter, pltf. brought an action against defts. for damages & an injunction:—Held: whether or not there was evidence of any title in pltf. derived from the lord of the manor to the soil of the beds or to a several fishery, pltf.'s occupation of the beds was sufficient to enable him to maintain an action for trespass.—FOSTER v. WARBLINGTON URBAN COUNCIL, [1906] 1 K. 568. —— Maintaining sea wall.]—Pltfs. were incorporated under Canvey Island (Sea Defences) Act, 1883 (c. lxxiii), for protecting Canvey Island, in Essex, from inundation by the sea. They succeeded former comrs. appointed by an Act of 1792, which contained a power for these comrs. under s. xiii to erect a new sea wall further inward, on giving compensation to the owner whose land was taken for this purpose. In 1813 the new wall, 4,300 feet in length, was built, & £150 given as compensation to the owner of the land taken. Under the Act of 1883 the property & rights of the former comrs. were vested in pltfs., who had power under that Act to hold lands. Pltfs. claimed to be owners in possession of the foreshore between the new & the old wall. Deft. claimed under a conveyance of Apr. 1919, to be the freeholder in possession of a strip of land comprising part of this foreshore, & to be entitled as of right to excavate & remove shells & other drift, even although, as pltfs. alleged, it deprived the new wall of protection & support, & exposed it to injury by the action of wind & water. The greater risk to the wall in consequence of deft.'s action was established by the evidence. In an action by pltfs. to restrain deft. from so removing the drift, & from trespassing on their land:—Held: (1) assuming the strip in queston to be deft.'s freehold, pltfs. were still entitled to an injunction restraining him from so removing drift from the strip as to expose their wall & works & the lands protected thereby to greater risk of inundations of the sea; (2) pltfs. had established their statutory title under the Acts of 1792 & 1883 to the whole of the land taken & set out pursuant to s. xiii of the first Act, & had exercised specific acts of ownership over the foreshore. The possession of pltfs. & of deft. being at most doubtful or equivocal, the law attached possession to the title, therefore deft. was a trespasser, & must be restrained from excavating or removing stones, shingle, shell or soil from the particular strip of foreshore & from otherwise trespassing on the same.—CANVEY ISLAND COMRS. v. PREEDY, [1922] 1 Ch. 179; 91 L. W., a clergyman of the Church of England, held services & delivered addresses on the seashore without the consent of pltfs., & asserted that the seashore was a highway & that he had a right to do so. Pltfs. brought an action against W., claiming a declaration that he was not entitled to hold services, etc., on the seashore without their consent, & an injunction to restrain him from so doing. There was no evidence that the acts of W. caused an obstruction or led to a breach of the peace; nor did W. adduce any evidence of a prescriptive right or custom in support of his contention:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to the declaration for which they asked; but that the matter was too trivial for an injunction, which must be refused.

(2) The public common law rights, too, with respect to the sea, etc., independently of usage, are rights upon the water, not upon the land, of passage & fishing on the sea, & on the seashore, when covered with water; & though, as incident thereto, the public must have the means of getting to & upon the water for those purposes, yet it will appear that it is by & from such places only as necessity or usage have appropriated to those purposes, & not a general right of lading, unlading, landing, or embarking where they please upon the sea, shore, or the land adjoining thereto, except in case of peril or necessity (HOLROYD, J.).

(3) As to having the right of royal fish & wreck, it is a great presumption that the shore is part of the manor, or otherwise he could not have them (HOLROYD, J.).

(4) The question is with regard to the shore; that is to say, the land between the high & low water mark & according to LORD HALE'S definition of the seashore between those marks at ordinary tides, that is to say, between the ordinary flux & reflux of the sea (HOLROYD, J.).—BLUNDELL v. CATTERALL (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 268; 106 E. prohibited. Applt., acting under instructions from the owner of the adjoining land, removed shingle from the foreshore at that place below ordinary high water mark, on to the foreshore above high water mark, where his men mixed it with cement to form concrete for the construction of a sea wall for the protection of the adjoining land. The portion of the foreshore from which the shingle was removed had formerly belonged to the land-owner, but the sea had encroached upon it. Upon an information charging applt. with an offence against the order, applt. contended that no offence had been committed, & claimed the right to take the shingle from one part of his property to another, & that, therefore, the justices' jurisdiction was ousted by a bonâ fide claim of right. 610. —— —— Who may take proceedings.]—By an order of the Board of Trade under Harbours Act, 1814 (c. 159), the board prohibited the taking of shingle from the shores of the sea between certain points, & for breach of the order sects. 14 & 21 of the Act imposed a penalty, half of which was to go to the Crown & half to the informer. An information under these sects. was laid against resp. for unlawfully taking shingle in contravention of the order, & it was expressed to be laid by R., "surveyor for & behalf of the urban district council of S." Justices having dismissed the information on the ground that the council could not sue for a penalty as a common informer, & that the information was not well laid by R.:—Held: that R. could properly lay the information & take the proceedings for the recovery of the penalty.—LAKE v. SMITH (1911), 106 L. The Board of Trade, by order, prohibited the taking of shingle from a part of the shore of a harbour, of which shore resp. was the owner. Resp. subsequently removed shingle from the shore, & proceedings were taken against him in a ct. of summary jurisdiction under Harbours Act, 1814 (c. 159), s. 14, for the recovery of the penalty. Resp. contended before the justices that he had acted under a bonâ fide claim of right as owner of the shore, & the justices, without considering the question whether the fact of ownership afforded any defence to proceedings under sect. 14, dismissed the information on the ground that, a bonâ fide claim of right having been raised, their jurisdiction was ousted:—Held: the decision of the justices was right.—BURTON v. HUDSON, [1909] 2 K. Deft. traversed the presentment, & upon issue joined was found guilty. The ct. then imposed a charge upon deft. of £26 10*s*., being the amount found by the jury to be the cost of repair of the sea bank, & ordered him to pay to the general expenditor that sum, the same having been expended by him in the repairs of the sea bank. No notice had been given to deft. to do the repairs as provided by Sewers Act, 1833 (c. 22), s. 15. 633. —— Purchaser of land—Land subject to covenant to repair.]—The purchaser of lands situate below the level of the sea is bound to inquire how all walls necessary for the protection of his property against the encroachments of the sea are maintained. Lands situate below the level of the sea in Broomhill Level, Guildford Level, & Walland Marsh, were, previously to 1794, held in undivided shares. In that year these lands were partitioned by a deed containing a covenant that the expense of keeping & maintaining the walls & gutts of & belonging to the lands thereby divided, should be borne by the owners thereof, & should be payable out of the said lands by an acre scot:—Held: purchasers of parts of the lands in Guildford Level & Walland Marsh, who had no actual notice of the covenant, were nevertheless bound thereby, & there was jurisdiction in equity to deal with the case.

Declaration that defts. were liable to contribute to the repair of a sea wall along the sea boundary of Broomhill Level, with consequential relief, although defts. were also liable to contribute to the maintenance of sea walls along the boundaries of the levels in which their lands were situated; semble: the covenant was one which would run with the land, although the assigns of the covenantors were not named.—MORLAND v. COOK (1868), L. 638. —— —— ——.]—A. was a frontager in a level on the Essex shore of the Thames under the jurisdiction of Comrs. of Sewers. An ancient sea wall protected the level against incursions of the sea. There was evidence proving a prescriptive liability on the frontagers in the level to maintain & repair the portions of this wall respectively fronting their lands. Part of the wall in front of A.'s land was destroyed by an extraordinary storm & high tide. This part of the wall was previously in good repair & in a proper condition to resist the flow of ordinary tides & the force of ordinary storms:—Held: in the absence of evidence that the prescriptive liability of the frontagers extended to the repair of damage caused by extraordinary violence of the sea, the liability to repair the damage thus caused to the wall fell not upon A. but upon the whole of the level.—FOBBING SEWERS COMRS. v. R. 640. —— —— Sufficiency of evidence of prescriptive liability.]—The pltf. was the occupier of land & deft. the owner of adjoining land, both fronting to a creek communicating with the sea.

It was necessary for the protection of his land that each person having land fronting the creek should maintain a sea wall to keep out the high tides, & such sea wall had been maintained along the creek time out of mind. Pltf.'s wall was continuous with defts., & the level of deft.'s land was higher than that of pltf.'s. It became necessary from time to time to put fresh materials on the top of the walls to keep them up to the proper height; deft. had neglected so to top his wall, & owing to an extraordinary high tide, the water flowed over his wall, & so from deft.'s land on to pltf.'s land doing considerable damage:—Held: (1) the mere fact that each frontager had always maintained the wall in front of his land, & no one had thought it necessary to erect a wall to protect his land from the water which might come from his neighbour's land, was not sufficient evidence to establish a prescriptive liability on the part of deft. to maintain the wall for the protection of the adjoining landowners; (2) by the common law apart from prescription, no such liability was cast on deft., as a frontager.—HUDSON v. TABOR (1877), 2 Q. Liability for cost of repair—Levying rate—"Houses, shops & farm buildings"—Whether aerodrome included.]—By the East Lancing Sea Defence Order, 1913, confirmed by a private Act, the owners of certain properties were made rateable to a sea defence rate, & the Order provided that the rate on "houses, shops, & farm buildings" should be lower than that on land. Applts. were the owners of an aerodrome within the rateable area, & in the aerodrome there were certain hangers used for the housing of aeroplanes & capable of use for their construction & repair. The hangers contained no lavatories or sleeping accommodation:—Held: in view of the object of the Order & of the context in which the word "houses" occurred it was not confined to dwelling-houses, but included the hangers & therefore they were rateable at the lower rate.—B. 648. —— —— Damage to adjoining land—Liability for compensation.]—Under the Middle Level Acts, 1810 to 1874, comrs. were appointed to cleanse, scour, & improve certain rivers & drains. By sect. 32 of Middle Level Act, 1810, it was provided that the mud, etc., taken out of the rivers, etc., should in all cases where the rivers, etc., were not embanked "be laid in such place as the comrs. in their discretion shall think proper," & by sect. 59 the comrs. were empowered to enter upon the lands of any person adjoining or near to any of the rivers, etc., "to take & dig earth therefrom & to do such other acts as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this Act, making satisfaction to the party or parties injured thereby."

The comrs. deposited large quantities of mud & sullage on the adjoining lands taken from certain rivers, the owners of which claimed compensation for the injury caused to their lands by such deposit:—Held: (1) in the case of a river that was not embanked, sect. 42 did not give the comrs. power to enter compulsorily upon lands which did not belong to them & deposit mud & sullage thereon without paying compensation, but merely gave them power to put such mud & sullage on such place that they in their discretion thought proper, provided they had power to lay the mud & sullage in such a place; (2) under sect. 59 they had power to lay the mud & sullage on the adjoining lands upon making satisfaction to the party or parties injured thereby, provided that what they did was to carry into effect the purposes of the Act.—Re MOULTON & MIDDLE LEVEL COMRS. The Act further provided that the comr. should assign land for the getting of materials for repairing public roads. The comr., in pursuance of such Act, by his award appointed certain roads to be set out, & awarded to the surveyor of highways land for the getting of materials for the repair of public roads. He further ordered that a watercourse should be made, & directed that such watercourse should for ever thereafter be repaired & cleansed by the surveyor of highways for the time being, the expenses attendant upon such repairing & cleansing to be paid out of a rate to be made for the repair of highways in the township:—Held: it was within the jurisdiction of the comr. to order the surveyor of highways to repair & cleanse the watercourse & to raise the expenses of so doing by means of a rate.—A.-G. v. TAMWORTH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL (1901), 85 L. 652. —— —— – –.]—Applt. & resps. owned lands upon opposite sides of a river. When the river was in flood & rose higher than its bank some of the flood water used to flow over resps.' land, ultimately finding its way back to the river. Resps. erected an embankment from a point on their land about half a mile from the river diagonally to its bank, with the object of protecting their lands behind the embankment. The water flowing over applt.'s land in time of heavy flood was thereby increased. Applt. sued resps. for damages & an injunction. It was not proved that any flood channel was obstructed, or existed, or that there was any ancient or rightful course for the flood waters across resps.' land:—Held: the action could not be maintained.—GERRARD v. CROWE, [1921] 1 A. (2) Not every ditch or cutting forms part of the public navigable river, even though it is large enough to admit of the passage of a boat.

(3) The question is one of degree, & is for the jury, having regard to all the facts.

A tidal creek was formed by the water of a tidal river filling excavations made owing to clay having been dug from land adjoining the rver & formerly dry ; it was used by boats in connection with working the clay, but there was no evidence that it was used by the public as a waterway, nor was it likely to be so used :—Held : the creek was not part of a public navigable river.—SIM E. 661. —— Cut made to aid navigation.]—By statute, reciting that the river Witham was formerly navigable for lighters, boats, etc., from Lincoln to the sea, but that, by sand & silt brought in by the tide, the outfall had been greatly obstructed & was in a great measure stopped up, whereby trade & commerce had decayed, powers were given to comrs. for the purpose of restoring the navigation ; & they were authorised, in order for the carrying on & effecting the navigation, to make a new cut through lands adjoining the river, not vested in the comrs. ; & the navigation so made was to be open to all subjects of the realm, paying certain tolls. The comrs. were also empowered, by this & another Act, under certain regulations, to build bridges. The cut was made, & a more direct channel thereby created, through which the waters of the Witham passed to the sea. A co., in whom the powers of the comrs. afterwards became vested by statute, built a bridge, not according to the regulations, & occupying, to some extent, the bed of the new cut. On indictment against them for a nuisance to the river as a public highway, the jury found specially that the co. were guilty of building the bridge, but that it did not obstruct the navigation. On motion to enter the verdict for defts. :—Held : (1) the cut was a public navigable river, the obstruction of which was an indictable offence ; (2) building a bridge partly in the bed of a navigable river is not necessarily a nuisance ; the question whether in fact it be so or not in a particular instance, is for a jury : & the verdict here, negativing actual obstruction, was, in effect, an acquittal.—R. v. BETTS (1850), 16 Q. 684. —— —— ——.]—(1) The bed of all tidal navigable rivers & of all arms of the sea is in the Crown, but is so for the benefit of the subjects. The right of navigation belongs, by law, to all the subjects of the realm, & the right to anchor is a necessary part of the right to navigate. This right never could have been interfered with by grant from the Crown.

The grant therefore of an oyster-bed in an arm of the sea below low water mark, must have been taken by the grantee, subject to the public right of navigation; & he cannot now, in respect of his ownership of the soil, make any demand, even if expressly granted to him, which in any way interferes with the enjoyment of this public right.

The barony titles contained no express grant of foreshore, nor did they contain any specific boundaries which could be held to include the foreshore. Applts. were a public body having certain jurisdiction & powers over the River Thames, the bed & soil whereof & of the shores within the flux & reflux of the tides were vested in them by statute. The Acts by which their duties were regulated gave them various powers for the improvement of the navigation of the river, but gave them no power of scavenging or removing nuisances in the portion of the river hereafter referred to, & their power of raising funds, & the application of the funds when raised, were strictly limited by statute & did not include a power of raising money for the sanitary improvement of such portion of the river. A nuisance injurious & dangerous to health existed between high & low water marks in a tidal creek running inland about 400 or 500 feet from the line of the river; it consisted of an accumulation of foul mud, which was largely composed of decomposing organic matter, & was chiefly derived from matter held in suspension in the water or floating on its surface & left when the tide receded; it was impossible to fix upon any person or persons as having caused the accumulation. An order having been made upon applts. as owners of the premises upon which the nuisance existed for its abatement:—Held: under their Acts of Parliament applts. were owners of the soil & foreshore of the river for certain specified purposes only, & were not owners for the purposes of above Act, s. 4.—RIVER THAMES CONSERVATORS v. PORT OF LONDON PORT SANITARY AUTHORITY, [1894] 1 Q. of certain manors adjoining the Severn, a tidal & navigable river, for trespass on the foreshore, parcel of the manors, in a boat & on foot, for the purpose of shooting wild duck. Deft. denied that the foreshore was parcel of the manors &, even if it were, he claimed the right to go upon the foreshore & shoot & carry away wild duck on the ground of immemorial user, in four alternative ways: (a) as a member of the public in exercise of a general right of all the King's subjects in & over the foreshore of a tidal navigable river; (b) as one of the inhabitants of the manors by virtue of a trust or reservation in their favour which the ct. would presume to have been created by the original grant of the manors to pltf.'s predecessors in title; (c) as an inhabitant of the manors, being a wildfowler by occupation, by virtue of a custom of the manors; (d) by prescription as a right in gross enjoyed by him & his ancestors:—Held: on the evidence, pltf. had proved his title to the foreshore as part of the manors, & also to a several fishery in the Severn.

(2) The public have no rights over the foreshore of a tidal navigable river, when not covered by the tide, except such as are ancillary to their rights of fishing & navigation in the sea. When covered by the tide the foreshore is part of the sea, & the only rights of the public in or over it are the rights of navigation & fishing & rights ancillary thereto.

(3) The right claimed to kill & carry away wild duck is, whether wildfowl are birds of warren or mere wild birds in which there is no property, a profit à prendre & cannot be claimed by custom, but semble wild duck are birds of warren.

(4) There was not sufficient evidence of user to enable the ct. to presume the existence of a trust, or to establish a prescriptive right.

(5) The bed of the sea for some distance at least below low water mark, & the beds of tidal navigable rivers, are primâ facie vested in the Crown; & the Crown's ownership is, subject to the public rights of fishing & navigation & rights ancillary thereto, a beneficial ownership. The Crown can grant the bed of the sea, so far as it is vested in the Crown, & a fortiori the bed of a tidal navigable river, to a subject, in the same way that the foreshore can be so granted; though no such grant can operate to the detriment of the public right of fishing & that of navigation with its ancillary rights, except possibly in connection with rights such as anchorage, when some consideration moves to the public from the grantee.—FITZHARDINGE (LORD) v. PURCELL, [1908] 2 Ch. 139; 77 L. The bank was situated chiefly to the south of the medium filum at low water. The proprietor of A. had a Crown right to the barony cum piscariis. The proprietor of B. had a base right of salmon fishing. Both had fished for salmon from their respective lands for more than forty years, but neither party had cast their nets from his own shore nearly so far as the medium filum. The proprietor of the barony of A. had never fished from the sand bank, the fishings from which had been possessed by the proprietor of the lands on the north shore, immediately above the lands of B., & by the proprietor of B., since the bank came opposite his lands, which was within the prescriptive period. 742. ——.]—The presumption that, by a conveyance describing the land thereby conveyed as bounded by a river, it is intended that the bed of the river usque ad medium filum should pass, may be rebutted by proof of surrounding circumstances in relation to the property in question which negative the possibility of such having been the intention. The owners of a manor by conveyances made respectively in 1767 and 1846 granted to purchasers pieces of riparian land fronting a river, the bed of which formed parcel of the manor. It was proved that, prior to the earliest of the conveyances, a fishery in the river fronting the lands conveyed had for a very long time back been from time to time let to tenants by the lords of the manor as a separate tenement, distinct from the riparian closes; & that at the date of the conveyances in 1846 such fishery was actually under lease to tenants. The grantees under the beforementioned conveyances, & their successors in title, had, until the acts complained of in the action, never claimed or exercised any right of fishing over the bed of the river by virtue of any right of soil or otherwise, but the owners of the manor or their tenants of the fishery had always fished without interruption:—Held: under the circumstances the conveyances ought not to be construed as passing any portion of the bed of the river to the grantees.—DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) v. PATTINSON (1887), 20 Q. 745. Doctrine of accretion—Basis of theory.]—(1) Pltfs., under an inclosure award made in 1803, were entitled to a piece of land at Wraysbury bounded on one side by the Thames, which is there navigable but not tidal. The land ended in an almost perpendicular bank 5 or 6 ft. high, & the bed of the river reached to its foot, the water often reaching some height above the foot. Deft. was entitled to a several fishery in the river & to the bed of the river. The water of the river, owing to the removal of a weir, sank, & at the foot of the bank a deposit took place forming a strip on which some large trees grew, & which during some part of the year was left dry, but it was overflowed during a considerable part of the year. At the foot of the bank deft. dug a ditch which he regularly cleaned out for more than twelve years, & afterwards filled it up with concrete so as to make a footpath. Pltfs. brought an action for an injunction to restrain him from trespassing. The judge held that whether the strip had ceased to be part of the bed of the river was a question to be determined, not by any hard & fast rule, but by regarding all the material circumstances of the case, including the fluctuations of the river, the nature of the land, & its growth and user, & that, in the present case, the strip had ceased to be part of the bed & belonged to pltfs. as having been formed by gradual accretion to their land:—Held: the principle on which the judge had proceeded in determining whether the strip was part of the bed of the river was sound, but on the facts the strip had not ceased to form part of the bed, & therefore belonged to deft.; but when it was dry the rights of pltfs. as riparian proprietors were not affected, & they had right of access over it to the water, & could use it to the same extent as they could use the bed of the river in its old state.

Qu.: whether the accretions, if they had ceased to form part of the bed of the river, would have been the property of pltfs. as owners of the adjoining land.

Qu.: whether the doctrine of accretion could apply in a case where the steep 6 feet bank which formed the original boundary between the lands of pltfs. & deft. still remain clearly defined.

(2) Passages were cited from Bracton, Britton, Fleta, & Hale de Jure Maris, c. i. & vi., & the Year Book, 22 Ass., fo. 106, pl. 93, to show that the doctrine of accretion does not apply where boundaries are well defined & known. This may be if the boundary on the waterside is a wall, or something so clear & visible that it is easy to see whether the accretions, as they become perceptible, the case of a grant from the Crown by the fact that the river is a public navigable (though non-tidal) river, subject to a public right of passage, the Crown, as trustee for the public, having an interest in the bed remaining public property, & the presumed intention to pass the bed being therefore negatived.—MUELLER v. TAUPIRI COAL MINES, LTD. 748. Change of course—Whether gradual change presumed.]—(1) Pltf. was possessed of land in the parish of W., in the county of E., in the declaration in an action of trespass described as "situate at W., in the county of E., & abutting on the river of L. & on land in the possession of deft." The venue in the action was laid in the county of E. Pltf. was also possessed of the greater part of the said parish of W., which formed the east bank of the river of L., the boundary of the county of E. on the east, & of the county of M. on the west. Deft. was in the occupation of the adjoining land in the county of M. on the west bank of the river of L. The alleged trespass was committed on certain strips of land on the west bank of the river of L., which were accretions from the change of the course of the river of L., but whether the change causing these accretions had been gradual or sudden was not proved. Evidence was given of acts of ownership by pltf. & those through whom he claimed, over the land in question, & also evidence to show that it formed part of the parish of W. & of the county of E., although on the west bank of the river of L. Contradictory evidence was given by deft. The judge left to the jury the question whether the land was in the county of E. & parish of L., & whether it was in the occupation of pltf. or the property of deft.'s landlord. The jury having found that it was in the county of E. & in the parish of L., & that it was in the occupation of pltf., the ct. refused to grant a new trial because the judge had not directed the jury that if the change of the course of the river had been gradual, the presumption of law would have been that the land, being an accretion on the west bank of the river, would have been in the county of M., & the property of deft.'s landlord, as the owner of the adjoining land in the county of M.

763. ——.]—However commodious a place may be for the shelter of vessels, it will not therefore be a port, the establishment of which must be by authority of the Crown. But, if so established, then, whether naturally or artificially formed so as to shelter vessels, a consideration for anchor dues arises. Where it had been found on inquisition in the reign of Edward I. that a grantee of the Crown had had "from time whereof memory is not . . . wreck of the sea & toll with merchandise in the manor," & in the reign of Edward II. proclamations had been made to seize, in certain places, of which this manor was named as one, "where ships ply by the coast," etc., letters coming from abroad, & in the reign of Elizabeth a return to a Royal Commission mentioned the manor as a creek of one of the Cinque Ports, & many documents, some of them grants from the Crown, & others deeds under which the manor had from time to time been enjoyed, spoke of "tolls," & deputations had been issued by the owners of the manor to collect the tolls of all vessels anchoring there, & tolls had been so collected beyond the time of living memory, & a private Act of Parliament had adopted these expressions in authorising the conveyance of the manor to a company thereby incorporated :—Held : there was enough to justify the inference that a port did exist, & that a toll claimed, as a port or anchorage toll, had a legal origin.

In truth, the port which is admitted to have existed at Whitstable comes precisely within the definition of a port given by Lord Hale, viz., a place for the lading & unlading of ships or vessels, erected by charter of the King or a lawful prescription. And he says, in chapter 2 of his De Portibus Maris, "A port is quid aggregatum, consisting of somewhat that is natural, viz., an access of the sea, whereby ships may conveniently come, safe situation against winds where they may safely lie, & a good shore where they may well unlade; something that is artificial, as quays & wharfs, & cranes & warehouses, & houses of common receipt, & something that is civil, viz., privileges & franchises, viz., jus applicandi, jus mercati, & divers other additaments given to it by civil authority" (LORD CHELMSFORD).—FOREMAN v. WHITSTABLE FREE FISHERS & DREDGERS (1869), L. 774. Fixed pier in Thames—Control of Thames conservators—User under licence.]—The City of London by licence granted a co. permission to form a floating pier on the River Thames, such peir to remain during pleasure, & to take tolls on all passengers landed at the pier. Under the powers conferred upon them by Thames Embankment Act, 1862, the Board of Works took the floating pier from the co., & agreed to pay them a certain sum & to construct a new landing stage in lieu of the old pier, & to appropriate it in perpetuity to the benefit of the co. The Thames Embankment Act, 1868, purported to give validity to this agreement.

On a bill by the Conservators of the Thames, in whom all the estate, etc., of the City of London in the bed, soil, & shores of the river had become vested by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857, to restrain the co. from continuing in possession of the landing stage constructed in lieu of the old pier :—Held : the co. were entitled to the use of the pier only on sufferance, & at the pleasure of pltfs. ; the Board of Works had no power to convert the licence at pleasure into an irrevocable licence ; & the Act which purported to give a validity to the agreement between the co. & the Board of Works did not affect the rights of pltfs.—THAMES CONSERVATORS v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. 775. Agreement between neighbouring dock owners—Payment of compensation by one—To other for loss of business—Proceedings for recovery.]—Upon the establishment in 1836 of a dock co. it was enacted that, in order to indemnify the comrs. of a neighbouring harbour for loss of income, the co. should pay to the comrs. such annual sum as should make up the income of the latter to the average of the three next preceding years. Afterwards, in 1843, the above enactment was repealed, & in lieu of making up an average, it was enacted that the co. should pay to the comrs. every year the deficiency by which the yearly income of the latter should fall short of £1,000. In 1860, up to which time no demand had been made by the comrs. against the co., a mandamus was issued at the suit of a third party against the comrs. commanding them to take the necessary steps for recovering from the co. payment of certain alleged deficiencies in their income, extending over twelve years, from 1847 to 1858 inclusive ; &, the mandamus having in 1870 been finally declared to be valid, in June, 1870, a demand in respect of the alleged deficiencies from 1847 to 1858 was first made upon the dock co. by the harbour board, who had succeeded to the comrs. This was followed by an action for the amount. Upon bill by the co. in Nov. 1870, to restrain the action, & for declaration that in estimating the amount of the deficiencies the board were liable to give credit for all sums which their predecessors might but for their wilful default have received ; & that the board were debarred from requiring payment of any deficiencies prior to 1870 :—Held : (1) it was part of the duty of the comrs. year by year to have demanded from the co. payment of any sum that might have been due to them from the co. under the statutes ; & by the laches of their predecessors the board were now debarred from calling upon the co. to pay for any deficiencies prior to 1858 ; (2) the board were not debarred from calling upon the co. to pay deficiencies since 1858 ; & hence the co. were entitled to an account from the board of their income since that date, charging wilful default.

(3) The harbour comrs., in the exercise of their discretion, had permitted certain small articles on which they were empowered by statute to levy duties, to pass free of duty. They had also leased their tolls, having no statutory power to do so :—Held : as between the dock co. & the harbour board, these were acts of wilful default.—SOUTHAMPTON DOCK CO. v. SOUTHAMPTON HARBOUR & PIER BOARD (1872), L. 786. —— By statute.]—By an Act of Parliament, certain persons were incorporated as the Hull Dock co., & premises, before the property of the Crown, were given to them for the purposes of the Act, & they were authorised to make a dock, quays, wharfs, etc., which, it was enacted, should be vested in them for the purposes of the Act. Amongst other things, it was provided, that "all goods, etc., which should be landed or discharged upon any of the quays or wharfs which should be erected by virtue of that Act, should be liable to pay, & should be charged & chargeable with the like rates of wharfage & payments as were usually taken or received for any goods, etc., loaded or discharged upon any quays or wharfs in the port of London" :—Held : as the premises were only vested in the co. for the purposes of the Act they had no common law right to a compensation for the use of them, & the statute did not give them any right to claim wharfage for goods shipped off from their quays.—KINGSTON-UPON-HULL DOCK CO. v. LA MARCHE (1828), 8 B. & C. 42 ; 2 Man. & Ry. 787. —— ——.]—A company empowered by statute to take tolls in return for a public service is not bound, independently of express enactment, to exact the same tolls from all persons alike ; but is at liberty to remit the tolls, or any portion of them, to particular persons, at its pleasure & discretion. Stat. 11 G. 4, c. lxx, by which plaintiffs, a market Company, were incorporated, by sect. 76 empowered them to take from the master of any steamboat "in respect of every passenger landing on or embarking from the wharf or causeway" authorised by the Act to be made, "the" "tolls" "which" should "at any time or from time to time be fixed & appointed by" pltfs., not exceeding 2*d.* for each passenger. A subsequent Act, 6 & 7 W. 4, c. cxxxiii, incorporating another Company for the purpose of building a bridge from pltfs. market over the Thames, by sect. 53 authorised pltfs. to levy the same tolls for passengers landing on or embarking from the northern pier of the intended bridge which stat. 11 G. 4, c. lxx, s. 76, had empowered them to levy. And by sect. 125 it was enacted that "the tolls to be taken by virtue of" the "Act should at all times be charged equally," & that every "reduction or advance of" them should "extend to all persons whatever using the said bridge." Pltfs., after the bridge had been built, fixed & appointed the toll to be received "under the 76th clause of" their "Act of incorporation, from the master of every steamboat" "in respect of every passenger landing on or embarking from" the northern pier, at 2d. But by agreement with defts., a steamboat Company, they charged defts. a toll of 1*s.* 4*d.* per 100 of their passengers ; &, by agreement with another steamboat Company, charged that Company a lower toll of 1*d.* per dozen of their passengers. Passengers landing on or embarking from the northern pier from or on to steamboats used no other portion of the bridge than the northern pier, which abutted on pltfs.' land. Pltfs. having brought this action to recover from defts. arrears of toll for passengers at the rate agreed upon with defts. :—Held : (1) pltfs. were entitled to recover the full amount ; (2) the local Act was not an equality clause, requiring pltfs. to charge the fixed & appointed toll in full for each passenger ; but it directed the toll to be fixed & appointed merely in order that the public might know the maximum toll they could be called upon to pay ; leaving pltfs.' right to lower or remit the toll, if it otherwise existed, wholly untouched.—HUNGERFORD MARKET CO. v. CITY STEAMBOAT CO. 788. Special toll for—Use for purposes other than merely embarking goods or passengers.]—Pltfs. owned a pleasure steamer which ran day trips between the Old Swan Pier, London Bridge, & Hampton Court. The steamer was brought alongside the Old Swan Pier about three quarters of an hour before the advertised starting time & remained there until she started, her officers meanwhile doing all they could to get persons to take tickets for the trip. The conservators by resolution decided that pltfs. used the pier for a longer period daily than would be covered by a mere "call" at the pier by their vessel, for which the 6*d.* toll was payable, & they alleged their right to impose a terminal charge for this use of the pier by pltfs. of £2 a week. For a time this increased charge was paid :—Held : although the conservators might have a right to ask for special payment from a vessel using the pier other than for the purpose merely of embarking passengers or goods, that would be based on contract, but there was nothing in Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii) which gave defts. the right to levy more than the 6*d.* toll on a vessel merely because she was more than a few minutes alongside a pier embarking or discharging her passengers or goods, & the extra charge already paid, being unauthorised, was paid without consideration, & could be recovered back.—QUEEN OF THE RIVER S.S. tolls paid.]—By the terms of a Provisional Order authorising a co. to construct a pier the co. might levy rates on passengers using the pier & on vessels "mooring" within certain limits as soon as a certificate of the due construction of the pier had been given by the Board of Trade. During 1900 H. acquired the pier from the assigns of the liquidator of the co. He discovered subsequently that the pier had not been constructed in accordance with the Provisional Order. In 1907 he leased the pier to the M. co., who refused to allow pltfs., a co. running steamships to the pier, to come along side the pier except on payment of a certain lump sum for the season. Pltfs. claimed an injunction restraining H. & the M. co. from excluding their ships & passengers from using the pier, on the ground that defts. were not the lawful owners of the pier. Pending an action, an arrangement was come to that pltfs. should have access to the pier on paying the rates which would have been payable had the Provisional Order been operative. Defts. claimed under this arrangement to be entitled to "mooring" as well as passenger rates, & counterclaimed for payment of them. Pltfs. claimed repayment of the sums paid without prejudice under the arrangement, as well as of some sums previously paid under protest:—Held: (1) pltfs. were not entitled to the injunction, as the pier was unauthorised & constituted a public nuisance, & no statutory rights arose on its construction in favour either of defts. or the public; (2) pltfs. could not recover the rates paid by them without prejudice to obtain the use of the pier, for defts. could exclude pltfs. from the pier, although it was a nuisance, & pltfs. had therefore received consideration in respect of their payments, & could not recover same; (3) pltfs.' vessels which made fast to the pier merely to land & embark passengers, were not "moored" to the pier within the meaning of the Provisional Order & "mooring" rates were not payable in respect of them.—LIVERPOOL & NORTH WALES S.S. 807. What constitutes a wharf—Land in natural state—Used for landing goods.]—By a Canal Act, it was provided that lands, whether covered with water or not, & also all dwelling-houses, wharfs, etc., belonging to the co., should be rateable to the maintenance of the poor in the several parishes where they were respectively situated ; the lands according to their quantity & quality, & the dwelling-houses, wharfs, etc. according to the nature & respective uses thereof, & should be assessed in like manner as lands of a like quality & dwelling-houses, wharfs, etc. of a like & similar size or nature in the respective parishes where the same should be situate, should be assessed, & that the rates, duties & other personal property of the co., liable to be rated to the poor, should be assessed in like manner & in the same proportion as other personal property should be assessed. The co. had, on the margin of a large basin, a piece of land adjoining the private yard of a timber merchant. This piece of land next the basin consisted of natural ground ; it was not faced with brick or timber & the ground below. the water gradually sloped down to the bottom of the basin. The timber merchant landed his timber upon this piece of land, & it was there marked & measured by the Revenue officers. No acknowledgment or rent was paid to the co. for this privilege of landing the goods there, but their rates & duties were increased, a greater number of ships entering the basin in consequence of this privilege :—Held : this piece of land was not a wharf within the meaning of the Act of Parliament.—R. v. REGENT'S CANAL CO. 816. —— ——.]—In a public navigable river a decked barge or dummy is firmly moored alongside a quay, so as to be a private nuisance to persons having a right to land from the river on the quay: if it be so fixed as not to be readily abateable, any such person may pass over such dummy in order to get to the quay, there being no other route available, where his so passing over it is not more injurious to the owners of it than the removal would be; & especially if, to have removed it, would have caused such person injurious delay in his affairs & business. But he is not entitled so to use the barge, as a means of passage, except in such states of the tide as, but for the barge would have enabled him to land directly on the quay, & when the barge is therefore an obstruction & nuisance to his right of way.—EASTERN COUNTIES RY. Upon which a special verdict was found:—Held: no judgment could be given, pro defectu veredicti, in not stating precisely what legal right pltfs. had to go on the legal quays, in place of which, for certain purposes the docks were erected it only stating that pltfs. were used to cooper sugars for shipment for exploration there, which might be by contract with the owners of such quays; & if to a certain or any extent, such right of going on the quays & the docks might arise ex necessitate, no such necessity was stated in the verdict; it omitting to state what casks were there requiring necessary cooperage to be done upon the wharf; for it is clear that the docks are not to be used as the cooper's workshops.—BENTLEY v. SMITH (1805), 3 Smith, K. There were no words in the Act binding the Crown to pay such duties, but there were provisions exempting the Crown from liability in respect of coals imported into the port, for the use of His Majesty's steam packets, & actually used on board the same, & also from the tolls to be taken for passing over a bridge connected with the harbour. Certain stones were brought from P. by a barge, into the harbour of W. for the purpose of being used upon govt. works which were being carried on there, & which, if they had been brought by any private individual, would have been liable to the duties given by the Act of Parliament:—Held: the Crown was not liable to be called upon to pay such duties.—WEYMOUTH CORPN. v. NUGENT (1865), 6 B. & S. 22; 5 New Rep. 302; 34 L. Breach, that deft. unskilfully & negligently placed, moored, & stationed pltf.'s vessel in the part of the river near the wharf, & over the woodwork, & unskilfully & negligently detained the vessel there for a long time, until, on the natural fall of the tide, she fell & lodged against the woodwork, & was damaged thereby. 831. ——.]—Pltfs.' motor barge received damage by taking the ground on some large stones in a berth alongside defts.' wharf at K., where she was loading a cargo of slag. Defts., a railway co., owned the wharf, but not the bed of the river alongside the wharf, & they charged no dues in respect of the use of the wharf. The arrangements for the cargo to be loaded into the barge at the wharf were made by W., who was the collector of dues for the Humber Conservancy Board at K., & had an office on the wharf. W. acted as agent for both pltfs. & the shippers of the cargo, & told defts.' station master at K. that the barge was coming to load a cargo of slag. The cargo was carried over defts.' line of railway to K. A year previously W. had warned defts. that the berth might be dangerous to vessels using it owing to stones, placed to protect the river bank, falling into the bed of the river. Defts. took some soundings, but did nothing else:—Held: although defts. did not charge dues for the use of the wharf, they derived benefit therefrom by reason of the freight earned for the land carriage of the cargo, & they were in the position of persons who had invited vessels to use the wharf; they owed a duty, therefore, if they had not taken steps to see that the berth alongside the wharf was safe for vessels to ground in, to warn that they had not done so.—THE GRIT, [1924] P. 246; 94 L. Part V. Navigation on Tidal and Natural Inland Watercourses.

SECT. 1.—NATURE AND EXTENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF THE PUBLIC.

832. How arising—River must be highway—User must not be permissive.]—(1) The river M. was a non-tidal tributary of the Thames. The flow of the M. on its course to the Thames was obstructed by a mill dam, & in order to bring boats from the Thames on to the part of the M. above the dam, it was necessary to take them out of the water & carry them over private land. The M. above the dam flowed under bridges, first at C., & then at E.; & the part of the river between the bridge at C. & the dam was not a way from one public place to another, had never been used as a waterway except for purposes of pleasure & recreation, & its depth & capacity for boating traffic depended on the existence of the dam. Pltf., who was the owner of an estate lying on both sides of this part of the M., obstructed the waterway of the river where it flowed through his land with posts & chains. Deft., who was not a riparian proprietor, but who had for eight years previously kept boats on a piece of land not belonging to him & let them out for hire, pulled down the obstruction & justified this act on the ground that this part of the M. was a highway. Pltf. brought this action for an injunction to prevent his obstruction being interfered with, & deft. counterclaimed for an injunction to restrain any hindrance to the passage of his boats. From the evidence it appeared that there had been no maintenance of the waterway by any person, with the exception of dredging by the owner of the mill, that as far back as living memory went there had been boating upon this part of the river by the riparian proprietors & their friends, that subsequently, by degrees & at first quite secretly, a few persons living on the bank began to take remuneration for lending their boats, not making any charge but receiving what the borrower chose to give, that thenceforth the growing practice of boating for pleasure, including fishing, had not been effectively interfered with until pltf. put his obstruction across the stream, though notices had been put up near the river warning persons against trespassing in boats for fishing or otherwise; but there was no evidence which could establish any public right of fishing:—Held: the claim of the deft. must be treated as if it were a claim to establish a right of highway on dry land; so considered, the claim in effect was to impose on land a new servitude, or establish a highway on conditions which were inconsistent with a right of that kind; the true inference from the evidence was that the use made of this part of the river had been permissive & not as of right; that even if the boating of the public was not permissive deft. had not proved that this part of the river was a highway; pltf. was therefore entitled to maintain his obstruction as against deft., & an injunction must be granted to restrain deft. from interfering with it. (2) A right of recreation by custom upon the land of another cannot exist as a right in the public generally, but must be confined to the inhabitants of a particular district. The riparian owners might possibly be able to establish a private right of way, or a right of boating for recreation for themselves & their friends by custom, but the existence of such a right or custom, if established, would not entitle the public to boat on the river or support the claim that it was a highway. (3) Qu: whether a lake in private grounds, touched at one point only by a public road, can be subjected to a right which will make it a highway by persons launching boats from the road on it for pleasure.

I asked . . . if there was any authority for saying that a lake in private grounds touched at one part only by a public road could be subjected to a right which would make it a highway by persons launching boats from the road & boating on it for pleasure. No such authority has been produced (KAY, J.)—BOURKE v. DAVIS (1889), 44 Ch. D. 110; 62 L. T. 34; 38 W. R. 167; 6 T. L. R. 87.

833. Nature of right—Right to use in reasonable manner & for reasonable purpose.]—A navigable river is a public highway, navigable by all Her Majesty's subjects in a reasonable manner & for a reasonable purpose. Accordingly a riparian owner has a right to moor a vessel of ordinary size alongside his wharf for the purpose of loading or unloading, at reasonable times & for a reasonable time; & the ct. will restrain by injunction the owner of adjoining premises from interfering with the access of such vessel, even though the vessel may overlap his own premises, though such vessel would not be allowed to interfere with the proper right of access to the neighbouring premises if used as a wharf, nor to the free entrance to or exit from such premises, if used as a dock, by other vessels.—ORIGINAL HARTLEPOOL COLLIERIES CO. v. GIBB (1877), 5 Ch. 838. —— Not right of property.]—(1) There are two totally distinct & different things : the one is the right of property, & the other is the right of navigation. The right of navigation is simply a right of way.

(2) The public who have acquired by user the right to navigate on an inland water have no right of property.

(3) The right which the public have is a mere right to use the river for the purposes of navigation, similar to the right the public have to passage along a public road or footpath through a private estate.

(4) The owner of the banks of a non-navigable river may without any illegality build a mill dam across the stream within his own property, & divert the water into a mill lade without asking the leave of the proprietors above him, provided he does not obstruct the water from flowing as freely as it was wont ; & without asking the leave of those proprietors below him if he takes care to restore the water to its natural course before it enters their land.—ORR EWING v. COLQUHOUN (1877), 2 App. Cas. 839, H. Pltf. claimed to be owner under an award made in 1808 by comrs. under a local inclosure Act of 1801, & which award purported to allot the part of the broad so claimed to one of his predecessors in title. Deft. impeached the validity of the award, & challenged the claim to ownership on various grounds, alleging (inter alia) that the broad was a tidal water, & therefore Crown property, & open to the public for all purposes :—Held : upon the evidence, the broad was not tidal, deft.'s other contentions against pltf.'s claim to the ownership & exclusive right of shooting & fishing failed, & an injunction must be granted accordingly ; but pltf. had not made out his claim to restrict the public right of way & boating to the so-called "channel."—MICKLETHWAIT v. VINCENT (1892), 67 L. 843. —— Eundi, redeundi et morandi—As on public highway.]—That the public have a right to the free use of the sea for the purposes of navigation has been unchallenged law from the earliest times. It has frequently been enunciated in the form that the sea is a public highway & that ships have the right eundi redeundi et morandi over every part of it, no matter to whom the soil lying thereunder may belong (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.). —DENABY & CADEBY MAIN COLLIERIES, LTD. v. ANSON, [1911] 1 K. 844. Duration of right—Tide too low for vessels to float.]—(1) The liberty of passage on a public navigable river is not suspended when the tide is too low for vessels to float. The public right in this respect includes all such rights as, with relation to the circumstances of each river, are necessary for the convenient passage of vessels along the channel. It is therefore no excess, if a vessel which cannot reach her place of destination in a single tide remains aground till the tide serves ; although, by custom of agreement, a fine may be payable to the lord of the soil for such grounding.

(2) If property, as oysters, be placed in the channel of a public navigable river so as to create a public nuisance, a person navigating is not justified in damaging such property by running his vessel against it, if he has room to pass without so doing ; for an individual cannot abate a nuisance if he is not otherwise injured by it than as one of the public ; &, therefore, the fact that such property was a nuisance is no excuse for running upon it negligently.—COLCHESTER CORPN. v. BROOKE (1845), 7 Q. 851. Whether ownership of navigation includes ownership of adjoining banks—Ownership of banks not necessary for navigation.]—The proprietor of the navigation brought an action of trespass against the owner of the adjoining land, for cutting some bushes upon the bank of a cut made out of the river. The judge stated to the jury, that, from the length of time that had elapsed, they might presume that an agreement had been entered into between the parties, & that the owner of the land had received satisfaction; & that acts of ownership on other parts of the bank were evidence of the ownership of this particular part of the bank. The ct., upon granting a rule for a new trial:—Held: (1) the proprietors did not necessarily acquire such an interest in the soil of the bank, as would enable them to maintain trespass; (2) the absolute property in the soil was not necessary for the purposes of the navigation, &, the improbability of any purchase having been made should have been presented to the jury for their consideration; (3) the acts of ownership in other parts of the bank of the cuts, or channels of the navigation, ought not to have been received in evidence to prove that the place in question belonged to the proprietor of the navigation.—HOLLIS v. GOLDFINCH (1823), 1 B. & C. 205; 2 Dow. & Ry. General rule—Usual riparian rights—Subject to public right of navigation.]—(1) A riparian proprietor on the banks of a tidal navigable river has similar rights & natural easements to those which belong to a riparian proprietor above the flow of the tide, subject to the public right of navigation.

(2) Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (c. cxlvii), s. 53, empowers the conservators to grant a licence to the owner of any land adjoining the river, to make an embankment in front of his land, into the body of the river; by sect. 179 all existing rights of owners of lands on the banks of the river are preserved.

(3) Applt. & resps. owned adjoining wharves, applt. had access from his wharf to the river both on the south & west sides; resps. obtained a licence, under sect. 53 of the Act, to make an embankment, the effect of which would have been to cut off applt.'s access to the river on the west side:—Held: this access was a private right within sect. 179, & the Conservators had no power to grant such licence.—LYON v. FISHMONGERS' CO. 880. —— Prescriptive right—What amounts to —Substitution of new tow path by statute.]—To an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, deft. pleaded a right of way across the locus in quo for the occupiers of B. field, on foot & with cattle & carriages, enjoyed as of right & without interruption for twenty years before the commencement of the suit, under Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71). The replication traversed so much of the alleged right of way as was claimed to be used with carriages, & as to the residue of the plea, set forth a local Act, under which the Trent Navigation co., before the commencement of the twenty years, made a haling path for towing vessels along the river, across the locus in quo, into B. field; that after the commencement of the twenty years, under the powers of another local Act, another haling path was set out nearer to the river, but also across the locus in quo & into B. field, & that thereupon the Navigation co. abandoned the former haling path, which thenceforth ceased to be used as such; that, before & at commencement of the twenty years, the occupiers of B. field used & enjoyed, as of right & without interruption, by virtue & under the provisions of the first Act, a way along the first-mentioned haling path across the locus in quo, on foot & with cattle, which right of way ceased & determined on the abondonment of that haling path; but that, from that time until the commencement of the suit, the occupiers of B. field, claiming right to the way, as a continuation of the right before enjoyed by them under the Act, continued to use the same way; which way, & the use & enjoyment thereof along the haling path as aforesaid, is the same way, & the same use & enjoyment thereof as in the plea mentioned, except as to the user with carriages:—Held: the replication was good; it disclosed facts showing that deft.'s user, although as of right & without interruption during the twenty years, within Prescription Act, 1832 (c. 71), ss. 2, 5, was not such as would, before that statute, have been sufficient to prove a claim by prescription or non-existing grant; & those facts must be replied specially, & could not have been given in evidence under a traverse of the right of way alleged in the plea.—KINLOCH v. NEVILE (1840), 6 M. & W. 795; 10 L. 882. —— —— Loss of right—River converted into floating harbour.]—(1) A prescriptive right to a public towing path, on the banks of a navigable tide river, is not destroyed in consequence of that part of the river adjoining the towing path having been converted by Act of Parliament into a floating harbour, although the towing path was thereby subject to be used at all times of the tide; whereas, before, it was only used at those times when the tide was sufficiently high for the purposes of navigation.

(2) The prescription is not destroyed by a clause in the Act of Parliament, whereby the undertakers of the work were authorised to make a towing path over land, comprising the towing path in question, on paying a compensation to the owner of the soil, the effect of that being only to give him a compensation for any injury he may sustain by enlarging the then towing path, or otherwise.—R. v. TIPPETT (1819), 3 B. & Ald. 193; 106 E. The Ct. of Session, after proof taken held that there was established a right of towing & tracking vessels on to the banks of the C., with the exception of a part marked out & which belonged to resp., as to which there seemed to have been some interruption acquiesced in by the public:—Held: (1) the right of tracking on the north side of the river, where this excepted part lay, was as good as on the south; there was a clear right of tracking on both sides in point of law, but the acquiescence of the parties may have shut them out from the part excepted; (2) applts. were entitled to have mooring posts on this part so excepted & they were not liable to bear any part of the expense in keeping up the sea dykes or mooring posts.—CARRON CO. v. OGILVIE (1806), 5 Pat. 887. Extent of towpath—Construction of statute.]—Defts. were a corpn. constituted for the purpose of the upper navigation of the river Thames by Thames Navigation Act, 1866 (c. 89), & under the powers of that Act & of the previous statutes relating to the navigation which had become vested in them, defts. had constructed bridges & other works, & had acquired the right to use the whole of the towing paths, along the river, & to take toll for same. In the exercise of such right, defts. took an aggregate toll in one sum for the use of the entire navigation, & towing paths, which included the works defts. had constructed, as well as the natural soil which had been worn into the track of a towing path. Part of such natural towing path got into a dangerous state by the action of the water, & in consequence thereof pltf.'s horses whilst using it in towing a barge, for which the proper toll had been paid to defts., fell into the river & were drowned:—Held: (1) as defts. took one toll for the use of the entire towing path, parts of which were artificial, it mattered not that the place where the accident happened was not artificial, but it was the duty of defts. to take reasonable care that the whole of the towing path was in such a state as not to expose those using it to undue danger, & for a neglect of such duty defts. were responsible to pltf. although they were a public body receiving their powers for public purposes; (2) the towing path was not confined to the mere beaten track but included so much of the bank as might ordinarily be used by horses when towing barges.

(3) Semble: defts. would not be liable for the defective state of the towing paths if such state were a latent one, of the existence of which defts. might be ignorant though using reasonable care, or if they were to give notice of it to those who pay the tolls or to inform them that they must take the towing paths as they find them.—WINCH v. THAMES CONSERVATORS (1874), L. 892. Control of tow paths—By Conservators—Right to prevent obstruction.]—Provisions in different Acts appointed Conservators of a river navigation, & gave them full powers to do what was necessary for carrying the object of the Acts into effect, including powers to purchase land & levy tolls. The Conservators executed the powers of the Acts so far as related to the improvement of the river navigation, & the making of towing paths, & they levied tolls. There was no evidence that they had actually purchased any of the land that lay along the course of the navigation, & had been used to form the towing paths:—Held: as the Acts might be carried into effect without purchasing, the burden of proof lay on the conservators to show that they had purchased; & since they had failed to show it, though they were entitled to an injunction to prevent any owner of adjoining land from so using the towing paths as to obstruct in any way their free use for the purposes of the navigation, they were not entitled to be treated as owners of the soil of the towing paths.—RIVER LEE NAVIGATION CONSERVATORS v. BUTTON (1881), 6 App. Cas. 685; sub nom. LEA CONSERVANCY BOARD v. BUTTON, 51 L. 895. Right to build locks — Crown grant.]—(1) A person may, by the King's licence, raise locks upon a public navigable river flowing through his own land, for the advantage of the navigation; & the owners of barges passing through them may be obliged to pay such toll as the Privy Council shall afterwards appoint.

(2) In assumpsit on a promise to pay so much for passing through certain locks on a navigable river as A. should appoint, it is not necessary to give deft. notice of the sums A. appoints to be paid.—JUXON v. THORNHILL (1628), Cro. Car. 132; 79 E. R. 716.

896. —— —— Whether public right of navigation through lock.]—Under letters patent in the seventeenth century the owner of land adjoining the river Ouse between St. Neots & St. Ives, which was there a public river navigable only in sections, made in his own land cuts from the river & locks in the cuts & took tolls from the vessels passing through the locks. In 1720 by 6 Geo. 1, c. 29, the then landowner was empowered to rebuild a stanch in the river below St. Ives & to repair & maintain it & to take tolls on vessels passing through it. Tolls were collected at the lock for more than two hundred years & at the stanch for a long period by the predecessors in title of applt.: —Held: there was no evidence that the locks had ever been dedicated to the public as a highway, & applt. was not bound to maintain or repair or allow the public to pass through the locks or the stanch. —SIMPSON v. A.-G., [1904] A. 899. —— River made navigable by undertaker.]—Pltfs. were empowered to make & maintain the river T., "navigable for boats, barges, & other vessels, with proper cuts & deviations by the sides thereof," from M. quay to B. pool, & from thence to make & maintain a canal navigable for boats, barges, & other vessels, to T. bridge, & to make & maintain a collateral cut or canal navigable for boats, barges & other vessels from the said intended canal to R. mill; & in consideration of the great charge & expense which they must incur in making & maintaining the works, they were empowered to take from time to time, & at all times thereafter, so much per ton per mile for all minerals, merchandise & other goods, matters & things whatsoever which should be carried "upon the said navigation, canal & collateral cut, or any of them." Pltfs. had expended considerable sums of money in clearing & deepening the river from M. quay to a point about a quarter of a mile below B. pool, & had provided towing paths, etc., by the side thereof for the purpose of making the same navigable for boats, barges & other vessels; that part was always a public navigable tidal river; but they had not made the canal nor the collateral cut:—Held: they were entitled to recover tolls in respect of the carriage of goods over that part of the river which they had so made navigable for boats, barges & other vessels.—TAMAR MANURE NAVIGATION CO. v. WAGSTAFFE (1863), 4 B. & S. 288; 2 New Rep. 421; 32 L. 901. —— —— Construction of Acts.]—By an Act for making & keeping a river navigable, it was enacted, that certain persons therein mentioned should be conservators, & that for reimbursing them what should be laid out for the purposes of the Act, with 6 per cent. interest, until they had been paid the principal & interest of what they had disbursed, or should thereafter disburse, every vessel navigating the river should pay to the conservators certain tolls, namely a sum not exceeding 4*d.* for every weigh of coals, etc., & that in default of payment of such sums it should be lawful to detain the vessel, & that after the conservators should be fully reimbursed, certain less tolls, that is, the sum of 1*d.* for every weigh of coals, etc., should be paid, & no more. By a subsequent Act, reciting that it was necessary to erect a lock on a certain part of the said river, it was enacted, "That from & after the building of the lock an additional toll should be collected & paid to the conservators, at the lock, viz. the sum of 1*s.*, over & above the sum of 4*d.*, for every weigh of coals granted by the former statute"; & the same remedy was given for non-payment:—Held: as the two Acts were in pari materia, the clause giving the additional toll in the second Act was to be construed with reference to that giving the toll in the first Act, & so construing it, the true meaning was, that until the conservators were fully reimbursed, they were at liberty to take a less toll than that specified in the last-mentioned statute. —R. v. RIVER TONE CONSERVATORS (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 561; 9 L. By sect. 31, nothing in the Act is to be construed to extend pltfs.' authority to the execution of any works below Mrs. E.'s wharf in Maidstone.

By sect. 38, any action, suit, or information for anything done in pursuance of this Act, or in relation to the premises, shall be commenced within three months after the facts committed.

Maidstone extends along the river upwards about three furlongs from Mrs. E.'s wharf, to the College lock, constructed by pltfs., Maidstone bridge being between the two. Pltfs., besides other works on the river, had scoured a shoal between the said bridge & Mrs. E.'s wharf, & on their annual survey they always disembarked at that wharf.

In 1874, pltfs. amended their toll list, so as to charge, for the first time, tolls proportioned to a fractional part of a mile traversed.

Deft., owner of oil mills situate on the Medway, less than a mile above the College lock, but more than a mile above Mrs. E.'s wharf, refused to pay to pltfs. any toll upon barges coming up the river to his mills:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to charge tolls proportioned to a fractional part of a mile traversed since the amendment of their list, without reference to the three months' limitation provided by sect. 38.—MEDWAY NAVIGATION v. BROOK (1876), 33 L. T. 843.

903. —— Right of corporation to increase tolls —Effect of agreement by corporation disabling itself from increasing tolls.]—Pltfs. were by statute intrusted with the control & management of part of the navigations of the rivers Ouse & Foss, in Yorkshire, with power to charge such tolls, within limits, as the corpn. deemed necessary to carry on the two navigations in which the public had an interest. In 1888 the corpn. entered into two agreements with the firm of L. & Sons. By the Ouse agreement the corpn. covenanted to allow the firm, their successors & assigns, the right to carry cargoes on the Ouse in consideration of the annual payment of £600 in place of the authorised dues & charges, with a proviso that there should each year be refunded to the firm, their successors & assigns, the difference between the £600 & the amount ordinarily charged on the traffic actually carried. By the Foss agreement the firm covenanted to pay the corpn. £200 per annum for twenty years as a composition for the ordinary tolls, & the corpn. covenanted to allow the firm, their successors & assigns, the free use of the Foss navigation, on payment of £200 per annum in lieu of tolls, for such further term or terms as the firm, their successors or assigns, might from time to time desire. Defts. were the successors of L. & Sons:—Held: the agreements were ultra vires, because during their currency, which depended on the wishes of defts., the corpn., no matter what emergency might arise had disabled itself from exercising its statutory powers to increase the tolls so far as might be necessary; & being ultra vires at the date of their execution, the agreements did not become intra vires by reason of estoppel, lapse of time, ratification, acquiescence, or delay.—YORK CORPN. v. LEETHAM (HENRY) & SONS, LTD., [1924] 1 Ch. 557; 94 L. 912. Removal of public stairs or landing places—Substitution of new stairs or landing places.]—The Conservators of the River Thames, appointed by Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (c. xlvii), were empowered by that Act, "as they deemed necessary for the convenience of the public, to erect at any convenient places piers or landing places of such form & construction as they should deem most advantageous to the public, & causing the least obstruction to the navigation of the Thames."

They were also empowered to remove piers or landing places, provided that whenever they should remove or obstruct the free use of any existing public stairs they should cause some equally convenient public stairs to be erected in place of the stairs so shut up & removed. The Act also contained a clause expressly saving the rights, etc., of owners or occupiers of lands, etc., on the banks of the Thames:—Held: (1) although certain piers in course of erection by the conservators would injuriously affect the public right of navigating the river, the conservators were fully empowered by their Act to determine the question of public convenience or inconvenience, & this ct. would not interfere with them in the exercise of their discretion; (2) although the conservators had in erecting their piers obstructed the free use of the ancient public stairs, & had not as yet provided equally convenient stairs for the public; the Act did not make the provision of new stairs a condition precedent to the removal of the old, so as to afford any ground for the interference of a ct. of equity; (3) as the access from the river to the several wharves, etc., had not been entirely blocked up but merely rendered more difficult from the obstruction to the general navigation of the river created by these new piers, the riparian owners could not allege, as a private injury within the saving clause of the Act, a nuisance authorised by the Act, & suffered by them in common with the general public.—A.-G. v. THAMES CONSERVATORS, THORNTON v. SAME, CITY OF LONDON BREWERY v. SAME, CLOTHWORKERS' CO. v. SAME (1862), 1 Hem. & M. 1; 1 New Rep. 121; 8 Jur. 913. Construction of drain by local authority—Necessity for consent of conservators.]—Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 327, provides that nothing in the Act should be construed to authorise any local authority: (3) to interfere with any river so as to injuriously affected the navigation thereof, or to interfere with any towing path so as to interrupt the traffic thereof in cases where any body of persons were, by virtue of any Act of Parliament, entitled to navigate on or use such river, or receive tolls in respect of such navigation or use, without the consent of such persons.

Defts., as the urban sanitary authority & the highway authority of an urban district through which the river Thames flowed, resolved, on the report of their surveyor, to construct, for the drainage of surface water only, an outfall drain in a certain highway & carry it into, through, & under a towing path & bank of the river. The public had a right of passage along the towing path for towing vessels on the river, but the soil of the towing path was vested in the Thames Conservators. It was found that the execution of the work would temporarily interfere with the traffic upon the towing path, but that it was the intention of defts. not to interrupt the traffic over more than one-half of the towing path at any time, & to avoid as far as possible any interference with the towing of vessels from the path:—Held: having regard to the finding that the execution of the work by defts. would temporarily interfere with the traffic on the towing path, defts., as such authority, had no right to carry the outfall drain, into, through, or under the towing path & bank without obtaining the consent of the conservators, & submitting to their conditions.—RIVER THAMES CONSERVATORS v. WALTON-UPON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (1907), 96 L. T. 555; 71 J. P. 202; 5 L. G. R. 274, D. C.

914. Tow path—Validity of bye-law—Riding or driving on tow path.]—Between Hampton Ferry & Molesey Lock the course of the river Thames is nearly east & west. On the south bank is the towpath, which, for the purpose of illustration, is divided into five parts namely, A. west to E., E. west to D., D. west to F., F. west to B., & B. B. west to C. There was admittedly a public highway for foot passengers only, but for all purposes, from A. to B., & a public right of way over the same length for towing purposes with horses & other draught animals. Pltfs., the Thames Conservators, had statutory duties as to navigation & keeping the tow path in repair, whether they owned the soil of it or not, & also had a statutory power to make bye-laws "for the government, good order, & regulation of persons . . . using the tow paths," or for preventing disorderly conduct or the use of bad language to the annoyance of persons using the banks or tow paths of the Thames. The strip of tow path A. to E. was owned in fee simple by pltfs. The strip E. to D. was owned in fee simple by defts. as also was the land contiguous to & on the south of that strip to the predecessors in title of defts., but the conveyance described the land as bounded on the north by the tow path & as coloured red on an annexed plan, the part coloured red not including the tow path. The strip of tow path F. to B. belonged to pltfs. in fee simple. The soil of the rest of the tow path B. to C., was vested in persons who were not parties to the action:—Held: (1) the rule usque ad medium filum aquæ applied so as to enable the ct. to presume that the whole width of the strip of tow path D. to F. passed by the conveyance of the land lying to the south of it, & the fact that in the same conveyance, where other land was conveyed, the strip of tow path to the north of it was expressly conveyed was not sufficient to rebut the presumption; (2) as to the portion of tow path vested in them in fee simple defts., had the ordinary rights of user attached to the ownership of land subject to the public footway & the exercise of pltf.'s rights in respect of navigation; (3) although pltfs. had the statutory power to make bye-laws for the purposes aforesaid, a bye-law that no person should ride or drive a horse on the tow path except when towing a vessel, or drive any cart, wagon, or other vehicle, over or upon any part of the towing path, unless there was a public right of way for such cart, wagon, or vehicle, was ultra vires so far as it prohibited, on parts of the towing path not vested in pltfs., the acts referred to, where the doing of them did not necessarily damage or injure the tow path or interfere with the free navigation of the river; (4) pltfs., being a body holding land under statutory duties, could not make dedication of any portion of the tow path, even if vested in them, as a public highway, which was inconsistent with the proper performance of those duties.—THAMES CONSERVATORS v. KENT, [1918] 2 K. 918. Power to licence obstruction—Interfering with navigation.]—By Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (c. cxlvii), s. 53, it is enacted that "it shall be lawful for the conservators to grant to the owner or occupier of any land fronting & immediately adjoining the river Thames a licence to make any pier, jetty, etc., immediately in front of his land, & into the bed of the river, upon payment of such fair & reasonable consideration as is by this Act directed, & under & subject to such other conditions & restrictions as the conservators shall think fit to impose"; & by s. 179 it is enacted that "none of the powers by this Act conferred, or anything in this Act contained, shall extend to take away, alter, or abridge any right, claim, privilege, franchise, exemption, or immunity to which any owners or occupiers of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments on the banks of the river, etc. are now by law entitled, nor to take away or abridge any legal right of ferry, but the same shall remain & continue in full force & effect as if this Act had never been made":—Held: it was competent to the conservators under this Act to grant to the owners of a wharf a licence for the projection of a jetty or landing stage into the bed of the river in front of their premises, although such erection might in some degree obstruct the enjoyment by the adjoining owners of the free navigation of the river, such right of enjoyment by them in common with the rest of the public, not being a right contemplated by the saving clause.—KEARNS v. CORDWAINERS' CO. Projecting pile—Liability for damage to steamboat.]—Pltfs.' steamer, while navigating the river Thames near Kew Bridge, was damaged by a baulk of timber which had been at one time apparently used as a pile, & which was afterwards found to have its blund end stuck in the bed of the river & its pointed end slanting upwards & only a few inches below the surface of the water:—Held: upon the facts, assuming that a duty lay upon the Thames Conservators to keep the river Thames free from obstructions to navigation, there was no evidence that the conservators had been guilty of any neglect of such duty causing the damage to pltf.'s steamer.—QUEENS OF THE RIVER S.S. 928. Construction of works—Necessity for licence—Construction of sewage works under Metropolis Management Acts.]—By Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 135, the Metropolitan Board of Works, to whose powers & obligations the London County Council have now succeeded, were required to make such sewers as they might think necessary for preventing all or any part of the sewage of the Metropolis from flowing or passing into the river Thames in or near the Metropolis & to cause such sewers & works to be completed on or before Dec. 31, 1860, & also to make all such other sewers & works & such diversions or alterations of any existing sewers or works vested in them under that Act as they might from time to time think necessary for the effectual sewerage & drainage of the metropolis.

By Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1858 (c. 104), s. 25, "In order to preserve the navigation of the river Thames, the plans of any work to be constructed under the authority of this Act upon the banks, bed, or shore of the river Thames, which may interfere with the free navigation of the river, shall be approved by the conservators of the river Thames in writing signed by their secretary, before such works are commenced, certifying that the works according to such plans will not interfere with the navigation of the river Thames":—Held: sect. 28 of the Act of 1858 was a subsisting enactment, therefore the London County Council were entitled by virtue of the Acts of 1855 & 1858 to construct works in, over, or under the bed of the river Thames, & the Port of London Authority, who had succeeded to the powers & obligations of the conservators of the river Thames, were bound to consider, pursuant to s. 28 of the Act of 1858, any plans of works which might be submitted to them by the London County Council, & if they were of opinion that such works or any of them would not interfere with the navigation of the river Thames to approve the plans for the same & give their certificate accordingly, & that as to any works the plans of which might have been so approved, & as to which the certificates above mentioned had been given the London County Council were not bound to obtain any further licence from the Port of London Authority.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY, [1914] 2 Ch. 362; 84 L. 929. —— —— Wharf.]—Owners of land adjoining the Thames having applied for permission to construct a deep water wharf & other extensive works, the Port authority in Nov. 1917, decided to refuse the application on the ground that the accommodation applied for was of the character of that which Parliament had charged the authority with the duty of providing. In Sept. 1918, applcts. applied for, & later obtained, a rule nisi for a mandamus commanding the authority to consider & exercise their discretion according to law upon the application, insisting that they had not done so:—Held: (1) on the facts there had been no refusal by the Port authority to consider & exercise their discretion according to law; (2) the Port authority, in view of their position, powers, & duties, were warranted in adopting a general policy in granting licences under Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii), s. 109; (3) if the decision of the Port authority amounted to a refusal to exercise their discretion according to law, an appeal to the Board of Trade under Port of London Act, 1908 (c. 68), s. 7 (2), assuming it to lie, was as convenient, beneficial, & effectual a remedy as that by way of mandamus.—R. v. PORT OF LONDON AUTHORITY, Ex p. KYNOCH, LTD., [1919] 1 K. There are about six thousand freemen & apprentices. The owner of a barge hired two qualified persons to navigate it within the limits; &, by their negligent management of the barge, another vessel was injured:—Held: the owner of the barge was liable to a civil action for the mischief, & it made no difference whether the navigators were hired for the job or by time.—MARTIN v. TEMPERLEY (1843), 4 Q. Applt., the master in charge of a steam tug, having been charged under the above bye-law, it appeared that he had collected thirty-one barges exceeding ten tons each at a point on the river within the prescribed limits immediately adjoining the entrance to a dock, made them up into a line four abreast extending along the shore from the Dolphin at the dock entrance, & towed them all at the same time from the point where they were so lying into the dock:—Held: he was not liable, inasmuch as in so towing the barges into the dock he was not navigating his tug on the river within the meaning of the bye-law.—ROLLES v. NEWELL (1890), 25 Q. 949. —— —— Lighter carried up river out of control.]—(1) Bye-law 27 of the Thames Conservancy Bye-laws, 1898, made under the powers conferred by Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii), s. 191, provides that: "Any lighter navigating the river shall when under way have at least one competent man constantly on board for the navigation & management thereof, & all such craft exceeding 50 tons, but of not more than 150 tons burthen, shall when under way have one man in addition on board to assist in the navigation & management of the same:—Held: the bye-law was not ultra vires, & both men required by the bye-law must be lightermen or watermen licenced by the Watermen's Co., or apprentices duly qualified.

(2) Three lighters lashed together were hauled out of dock into the river by means of a line attached to one of them, & controlled by a man on the dock pierhead. On getting clear of the dock the line was slackened, & the lighters were carried up by the tide as far as the line would allow. A man on board then by means of a staff or hitcher pushed the lighters along the shore till they reached a spot 95 yards from the dock, where they were made fast:—Held: the lighters had not been "navigated" within Watermen's & Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859 (c. cxxxiii), s. 66.

(3) A lighter, with a licenced lighterman on board, was drawn out of dock by means of hydraulic machinery fixed at the pierhead. On gaining the river the lighterman cast anchor, but it failed to hold, &, by the combined force of the hydraulic machinery, the wind, & the tide, the lighter was taken up the river for over 500 yards. The lighterman then secured the lighter at some barge roads:—Held: the lighter was not "navigating" the river within the meaning of bye-law 27.—GARDNER, LOCKET & HINTON, LTD. v. DOE, BUCK v. SMITH, KEEN v. ADAMS, [1906] 2 K. He claimed to take the sand under a licence from a lessee, holding under a lease, which demised the right to take sand from the place in question:—Held: the place was part of the "shore" of the river, within the meaning of sect. 3, not of the "bed," within the meaning of sect. 87, the Act did not interfere with the right of the lessee to licence applt. to take sand, & applt. could not be convicted of an offence against the Act.—PEARCE v. BUNTING, R. v. WEDD, Ex p. PEARCE, [1896] 2 Q. To hinder the course of navigation is against Magna Charta (HOLT, J.).—R. v. CLARK (1702), 12 Mod. Rep. 615; 88 E. R. 1558.

955. Obstruction must be such at commencement.]—That which is not a nuisance at the time it is done, cannot become so by length of time.

It was proved that the batts or heaps of stones, made use of in throwing & landing nets, had been used in the Tweed a time before the memory of man; & although they were admitted to be nuisances now, yet the ct. could not presume that they were so at the time of the erection, but on the contrary, intimated an opinion, that the presumption ought to be, that at first they were not nuisances.

The jury not finding that the batts impeded the navigation at the time they were made, the ct. suspended their judgment on a verdict for deft., that another bill might be preferred, if possible to ascertain that fact.—R. v. BELL (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 42.

956. Obstruction a question of fact.]—An encroachment on the banks of a navigable river is not necessarily a nuisance; but the jury ought, on the facts of the case, to say whether the public are in any way inconvenienced; for, if they are not, then it is not a nuisance.—R. v. SHEPARD (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 45.

957. ———.]—(1) The obstruction of the freedom of passage, in a port, or a public navigable river, is primâ facie a nuisance, & as such is properly the subject of indictment.

(2) A writ ad quod damnum, & licence thereupon to erect that which causes the obstruction, will be no bar to such indictment; but the jury have a right, notwithstanding this licence, to exercise their judgment in declaring whether it be a public nuisance.

(3) It is a question for the jury, whether the general benefit to the public, & to trade & commerce, arising from the erections which occasion the obstruction be equivalent or superior to the inconveniences which thereby result to the navigation.

Upon the trial of an indictment for a nuisance in a navigable river, by erecting staiths there for loading ships with coals, the jury were directed by the learned judge to acquit defts. if they thought that the abridgment of the right of passage occasioned by these erections was for a public purpose, & produced a public benefit, & if the erections were in a reasonable situation, & a reasonable space was left for the passage of vessels on the river; & he pointed out to the jury that by means of the staiths coals were supplied at a cheaper rate, & in better condition, than they otherwise could be, which was a public benefit:—Held: this direction to the jury was proper.—R. v. RUSSELL (1827), 6 B. & C. 566; 9 Dow. & Ry. 958. ———.]—On an indictment for a nuisance, it was proved on the part of the prosecution, that the wharf, the nuisance complained of, was erected over a part of the river, between high & low water mark, where boats were used before to pass; & for deft. it was shown that the wharf was a convenience to the public, inasmuch as boats of heavy burden could come to unlade at the wharf, which, before the building of the wharf, anchored in the middle of the river; & that the channel of the river was by this convenience kept clear:—Held: the question for the jury was, whether the wharf occasioned any hindrance to the navigation of the river by vessels of any description, & not whether the erecting of the wharf had caused a benefit to the navigation in general.—R. v. RANDALL (1842), Car. & M. 496.

Immediately after the sinking of the ketch, & before any expenses were incurred in removing her, defts. abandoned her. Plea, that defts. had done the things complained of under the special Act, & under Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 19), & the Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (c. 20); that plans & books of reference were deposited with the clerk of the peace; that the part of the bed of the river which was obstructed was among the lands delineated in the plans & described in the books of reference; & that defts. did, for the purpose of making & constructing the railway in the Act, & under & by virtue of the powers & provisions mentioned in the Act & Acts therewith incorporated, & not otherwise, enter upon same part of the bed of the river, & make & construct part of the railway thereon, same being necessary for the purpose of making the railway. Replication de injuriâ:—Held: the first Clause of Sect. 16 of Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), includes navigable rivers as well as rivers not navigable, & defts. were authorised by it to construct their railway upon the bed of the navigable part of the river.—ABRAHAM v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. Defts., in accordance with a contract with the provincial govt., constructed a new bridge at this outlet, which lessened the size of the passage & impeded the use of the lake by vessels, although the highway could thereafter be more beneficially used by the general public:—Held: the latter circumstance should not be considered where individuals lost the benefits of navigation, & especially where a particular injury was caused by the change.—MYRER v. CLISH, MYRER v. MCDONALD (1881), 40 N. PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.

d. Right to obstruct.]—Held: after 18 Vict. c. 176, pltf. could not maintain an action against defts. for unlawfully & wrongfully erecting a bridge across the Twenty Mile Creek, & impeding 1864, empowered defts. by sect. 7, to make "in the line, & according to the levels defined in the deposited plans," & "upon the lands delineated in the plans . . . the following works; that is to say, a pier or landing stage at New Brighton . . . together with all such jetties, esplanades, landing-places, toll-gates or bars, & other works or conveniences in connection therewith," as defts. should from time to time think fit. The Act also, by sect. 8 required that, previously to commencing the pier or landing stage, defts. should deposit, at the Admlty. Office, plans "of the pier or landing stage, & works connected therewith," for approval, & that "such pier or landing stage & works should be constructed only in accordance with such approval." The Act, the objects of which, as shown by its recital, required the provisions of Public Health Act, 1848 (c. 63), for their performance, by sect. 2 enacted that it should be executed by defts., "subject to the powers & provisions of Public Health Act, 1848 (c. 63)." Defts. accordingly constructed a pier & landing stage at New Brighton. The pier was a solid structure, which did not extend to the low water mark, but the landing stage floated on the river & was moored, below low water mark, by anchors fixed in the bed of the river, a bridge being made to connect the landing stage with the pier. Part of this landing stage was beyond the limits marked on the deposited plans, but it, with its mooring anchors, received the approval of the Admlty., pursuant to sect. 8 of the Act. One of the mooring anchors to which the floating stage was attached, was insufficiently buoyed to indicate its position under the water, & thereby injured a boat of the pltfs., which whilst lawfully navigating the river, & without any negligence of pltfs. struck against such anchor. Defts. were guilty of negligence in the means used to indicate the position of the anchor; but, as to this, they acted in the bonâ fide belief that they were acting under the powers given them by their Act of 1864. In an action for the injury to pltfs.' boat:—Held: (1) the landing stage & works were authorised by the Act of 1864; (2) there was a cause of action against defts. for negligence in insufficiently buoying the anchor, which caused the injury to pltfs.' boat.—v. WALLASEY LOCAL BOARD (1873), L. 971. Any structure in bed of river.]—(1) A wharf owner piles into the bed of a river, extending the wharf so as to occupy 3 feet out of a breadth of about 60 feet available for navigation:—Held: this was such an obstruction as would be restrained at the suit of a municipal corpn. empowered by Act of Parliament to remove obstructions.

(2 The piles have been placed in the stream of a navigable river, which is so narrow that every foot is wanted for navigation. It is true there may be spots in the river where space is not wanted, & where that which would otherwise be a nuisance might not be such an obstruction of the highway as to make it the duty of this ct. to interfere; but it appears that the space is actually wanted for the purposes of navigation, & in such a case there is no difference between a highway on land & a highway on water. It is no answer to say that there is room for the ships, & that if they are navigated with skill & care there will be no obstruction. Those who use the river are entitled to say that they have a right to the whole of the space; & . . . it is not any answer that the obstruction only occurs at certain times of the tide, & that in some respects the alteration would be advantageous (MELLISH, L.J.).—A.-G. v. TERRY (1874), 9 Ch. In 1857, a flood washed away the bed of the river, &, in 1859, resps., who had mills or works adjoining, & was owner of the land on both sides of the stream, restored the bed to its original level by laying large stones across, side by side, without any cement or other fastening:—Held: this was not a "building, erection or thing," within sect. 158, & the justices were justified in declining to convict.—COLBRAN v. BARNES (1861), 11 C. 983. Defective camp shed.]—One who erects or keeps erected on the shore of a navigable river between high & low water mark a work for the more convenient use of his wharf adjoining, which work, either from its original defective construction or from want of repair, presents a dangerous, hidden, obstruction to the navigation, is responsible for an injury thereby occasioned to a barge coming to the wharf, without any default on the part of the person in charge of it.

Defts. were possessed of a wharf abutting on the river Thames, the soil in front of which was for the more convenient access thereto excavated by their predecessor, who placed there a camp shed, a structure of piles & planks to keep up the adjoining soil. This camp shed was originally improperly constructed, & was suffered to be out of repair. A barge of pltfs. was brought to the wharf for the purpose of receiving goods by means of the wharf crane from a schooner which was moored alongside & was discharging her cargo at the wharf, & those in charge of her, not being aware of the existence or the condition of the camp shed, so moored the barge that, on the tide receding, she came upon one of the piles, which forced a hole in her bottom, & the barge & its contents were damaged:—Held: these facts disclosed a duty in defts. to keep the camp shed in repair or give notice of the danger, & a breach of that duty for which they were responsible in damages; & it was immaterial whether or not pltfs. paid for the use of the wharf or the crane.—WHITE v. PHILLIPS (1863), 15 C. 989. Débris of broken bridge in river—Statutory duty to remove.]—The North British Railway (New Tay Bridge) Act, 1881, gave the North British Railway authority to erect a new bridge over the Tay a little higher up the river than one blown down on Dec. 28, 1879. Sect. 21 of this Act provided, "The co. shall abandon & cause to be disused as a railway so much of the North British Railway as lies between the respective points of junction therewith of railway No. 1 & railway No. 2 ; & shall remove the ruins & débris of the old bridge, & all obstructions interfering with the navigation caused by the old bridge, to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade." The magistrates of Perth, whose jurisdiction extends down the river to within about three miles of the old bridge, raised an action for declarator & implement :—Held : (1) the special Act imposed an absolute obligation to remove the whole ruins & débris of the old bridge ; & sect. 21 did not give the Board of Trade a discretionary power to dispense with the performance of any part of this obligation ; & it followed that resps. had an interest to obtain a declarator as to the extent of the obligation ; (2) the obligation did not become immediately prestable ; (3) the import of the expression "to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade" was, that though not bound to submit their plans of removal, including the time & manner, yet, as a matter of prudence, the co. ought to do so ; (4) in the circumstances it would be inexpedient, though hardly incompetent, to do more now than simply ordain the co. to remove the whole ruins & débris in terms of sect. 21, for to order the removal "forthwith" might unduly hamper the discretion of the Board of Trade ; & if the co. were guilty of undue delay in applying to the Board of Trade ; or if they should proceed at their own hand so as to cause obstruction to navigation ; or if, after obtaining the sanction of the Board of Trade to some scheme of removal, they failed to properly execute it, or any conditions attached, resps., on application to the ct., had an effective remedy.—NORTH BRITISH RY. C. Weirs.

990. Legality of weir in navigable river—Crown grant before Edward I.]—(1) A weir appurtenant to a fishery, obstructing the whole or part of a navigable river, is legal, if granted by the Crown before the commencement of the reign of Edward I.

(2) Such a grant may be inferred from evidence of its having existed before that time.

(3) If the weir, when so first granted, obstruct the navigation of only a part of the river, it does not become illegal by the stream changing its bed, so that the weir obstructs the only navigable passage remaining.

(4) Trespass for breaking down a weir appurtenant to a fishery. Justification, that the weir was wrongfully erected across part of a public & navigable river, the Severn, where the King's subjects had a right to navigate, & that the rest of the river was choked up so that defts. could not navigate without breaking down the weir. Replication, that the part where the weir stood was distinct from the channel where the right of navigation existed, & was not a public navigable river. Rejoinder, that the part was a part of the Severn, & the King's subjects had a right to navigate there when the rest was choked up, & that the rest was choked up. Surrejoinder, traversing the right :—Held : in support of this traverse pltf. might show user to raise presumption of such a grant as above, & was not bound, for the purpose of introducing such proof, to set out his right more specifically on the record.

(5) Where the Crown had no right to obstruct the whole passage of a navigable river, it had no right to erect a weir obstructing a part, except subject to the rights of the public ; &, in such a case, the weir would become illegal upon the rest of the river being so choked that there could be no passage elsewhere.

(6) By the common law the public always had a right, paramount to any power in the Crown, to navigate over every part of a common navigable river.—WILLIAMS v. WILCOX (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 314 ; 3 Nev. & P. K. B. 606 ; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 477 ; 7 L. J. Q. B. 229 ; 112 E. R. 857.

1004. Right to recover from owner of vessel.]—A steamship ran down & sank a fishing vessel in the river Thames. The owners of the steamship admitted liability subject to the claim of the owners of the fishing vessel being referred to the registrar & merchants. At the reference the owners of the fishing vessel claimed £355, the sum which the Thames Conservancy were claiming from them as the cost of raising the vessel. The registrar rejected the claim on the ground that the owners of the fishing vessel had abandoned their vessel or ought to have abandoned her, in which case the Thames Conservancy would have had no right to recover the cost of raising the wreck from them. The Thames Conservancy sued the owners of the fishing vessel in the K. B. Div., & recovered the expense of raising the wreck & costs:—Held: the Thames Conservancy had under Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c. clxxxvii), s. 77, a right to recover from the owners of the vessel sunk the cost of raising the wreck whether it had been abandoned or not, & the owners of the fishing vessel were entitled to recover that sum from the owners of the steamship.—THE WALLSEND, [1907]

What expenses recoverable — Must be reasonable.]—The "charges & expenses" of raising wrecks to which the Thames Conservators are entitled under Thames Conservancy Act, 1875 (c. cxlvii), must be reasonable charges & expenses. In estimating such charges & expenses the Conservators are entitled to take into account the interest on the capital invested in the plant used in raising the wreck in question, repairs to & depreciation in, & insurance on plant; but they are only entitled to make such charges in each particular case in relation to the amount of plant used therein, & to the time for which it is actually used.—THE HARRINGTON (1888), 13 P. SUB-SECT. 1.—ABATEMENT.

See, generally, NUISANCE, Vol. XXXVI., pp. 202-206, Nos. 433-479.

1017. Right of corporation—Statutory power to abate—Whether "right or privilege"—General Pier & Harbour Act, 1861 (c. 45), s. 14.]—By an Act passed in 31 Hen. 8 the corpn. of the city of Exeter were empowered to pluck down, dig, break, & cast up all, & all manner of weirs, rocks, sands, gravel, & other lets & nuisances in the river Exe between the city of Exeter & the high sea, & further to do & make all other things requisite & necessary whereby ships, etc. might have their sure course & recourse in the said river to & from the city of Exeter, compensating the owners of the sail where such works should be made for injury done to the soil: —Held: this Act did not give the corpn. any right to institute a suit to restrain the erection of a pier in the river, but only a right to abate nuisances on giving compensation; the pier did not interfere with, or affect any property or privilege belonging to the corpn. within General Pier & Harbour Act, 1861 (c. 45), s. 14, & consequently the consent of the corpn. was not required for the erection of the pier. The right or privilege referred to in sect. 14 means a profitable right or privilege, one that confers a tangible benefit on the person or corpn. possessing it, & not a mere right to abate a nuisance on giving compensation like that which the corpn. of Exeter possessed under the Act of 31 Hen. 8.—EXETER CORPN. v. DEVON (EARL) (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 232; 23 L. T. 382; 34 J. P. 804; 18 W. R. 879.

1018. —— —— Power discretionary.]—Defts. were an unpaid body of trustees created by statute conservators of the Lee, an ancient navigable river, & were "authorised & empowered from time to time at their discretion to cleanse, scour, deepen, enlarge or straighten the channel or course of the said river, & also to set out, open, make & maintain certain new cuts or canals thereinafter specified, to communicate with the river & to be used for the navigation, "& also to remove all obstructions & impediments whatsoever to the said navigation." Defts. were also by statute empowered to levy rates or tolls for the use of certain locks & artificial cuts, but were expressly forbidden to receive any toll in respect of such part of the navigation as was between Bow Creek & Old Ford Lock, which part of the navigation was an ancient highway, & was by statute declared to be for ever free from toll.

P. claimed compensation, but subsequently protested against the act as illegal, & filed a bill to restrain the interference, & for a mandatory injunction:—Held: the Legislature, by the Acts in question, drew a distinction between sewers & drains & fleets, the sewers & drains only being vested in the comrs., & that, therefore, pltf. was entitled to an inquiry as to damages with a direction to pay the same, when ascertained, to him. His claim for compensation was no acquiescence, he was then ignorant that they were doing an illegal act, & took proceedings, as soon as he was aware of it.—PENTNEY v. LYNN PAVING COMRS. Action for injunction—Injury to mill by railway works—Persons interested by situation of business.]—A railway co. made excavations upon their own land, the purpose of which was the partial diversion of the stream of water of a navigable river, & the works so prosecuted necessarily occasioned the obstruction of a private road.

Pltfs., who were the owners of a fulling-mill, which was supplied with water from the river, alleged that the proposed diversion of the stream was illegal under the powers of the Act. Pltfs., who had a right of way over the private road, also alleged that the co. were interfering with the road without the performance of the conditions imposed by the Railway Act, as preliminary to interfering with the road:—Held: although the co. were working on their own land, pltfs. must be held to have had notice of the intended works of the co., & had by an acquiescence for eighteen months, during which the co. had expended a large sum of money on the works precluded themselves from asking for the interposition of this ct. by injunction.

1031. Application for mandamus—To compel repair of river bank—Apprehension of injury to navigation.]—A co. were authorised by Act of Parliament, to make, complete, & maintain a new course or channel for a river, the same to be of equal depth & breadth at the bottom, & of equal inclination at the sides with the old course or channel. They were also required to make compensation to persons interested in any houses & lands, injured by means of the execution of the powers thereby granted. The co., for the purposes of their works, purchased the entirety of certain closes, parts of which, after the undertaking was completed, they sold in lots. One of the conditions of sale was, that a strip of land lying between the lots & the new channel of the river, should be for ever left open as a public road. This road was afterwards adopted & repaired by the parish, but a portion of it having given way, in consequence of the action of the tide causing a slip in the bank, whereby the inclination of the sides of the new channel became altered, the owners & occupiers of houses built upon the said lots since the sale, called upon the co. to repair the bank, which they refused to do. On an application by the corpn. of Bristol, who are conservators of the river, on affidavits stating these facts & also stating apprehensions of injury to the navigation, though not showing any actual impediment caused thereto, the ct. granted a mandamus to compel the co. to repair & maintain the bank.—R. v. BRISTOL DOCK CO. 1. Relation of local measures to imperial measures—Proportion to be declared.]—A contract for the sale of corn by the hobbett is in contravention of the provisions of 22 Car. II., c. 8, s. 2, & therefore an action will not lie for the breach of it.

After Jan. 1, 1826, a sale may be effected by any local weight, or measure, if the ratio of such weight or measure to the standard weight or measure, be specified in terms.—TYSON v. THOMAS (1825), M'Cle. & Yo. 119; 148 E. R. 350.

The cargo consisted of planks exceeding 9 in. by 3 in. by an average of about $\frac{1}{8}$ in. By a custom of the hardwood timber trade, in measuring cross dimensions, fractions of quarter of an inch are disregarded:—Held: freight was payable upon the number of loads ascertained by measuring the cargo in the customary manner, & assuming that there had been a breach of the obligation to load planks 9 in. by 3 in. the damages were measured by the difference, if any, in freight,

20. Measures must be used for trade—What amounts to using for trade.]—Justices convicted W., under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, for possessing false weights & an unjust weighing machine. On a case stated, under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857 (c. 43), it appeared that W. was receiver of the Metropolitan Police, & that a station house, & all the chattels there, were vested in him under Metropolitan Police Act, 1829 (c. 44), s. 16; that, in the station house, were weights which were light, & a weighing machine which, from an injury, gave light weight; that these were used in weighing coals which were allowed to the constables. Conviction quashed: the weights, etc., not being used, within the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 21, & the station house not being a store, etc., where goods were exposed or kept for sale, nor weighed for conveyance or carriage, & sect. 28 being inapplicable.—WRAY v. REYNOLDS (1858), 1 E. & E. 165; 7 W. R. 86; 22 J. P. Jo. 753; 120 E. R. 870.

21. —— ——.]—Applt., a farmer, had in his barn or outhouse a balance or portable weighing machine, & two iron weights, which were found by the inspector of weights & measures to be light. The inspector saw no produce about applt.'s premises, & could not prove that he exposed or kept for sale, or weighed for conveyance or carriage, any goods or produce. Applt. having been convicted by justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 28:—Held: the conviction was wrong.—GRIFFITHS v. PLACE (1869), 20 L. T. 484; 33 J. P. 629.

22. —— ——.]—Resp. was summoned, under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 29, for unlawfully using for trade a certain measure which was not stamped as required by the sect. The evidence was that the resp., who was a milk carrier, was delivering milk at certain houses, & in the course of delivering the milk he took a can, which was an ordinary can with a lid used for delivering milk, & filled it from the tap of a churn. He then left the can containing the milk on the doorstep of a house where it had apparently been ordered by a purchaser. He was thereupon asked by an inspector what he had delivered to the purchaser, & he replied "A pint of milk." The can was not stamped as a measure, but was of the correct capacity, one pint, when the lid was not closed. It was not completely filled when the inspector measured the milk, with the result that the quantity sold as a pint of milk was deficient by half an ounce:—Held: the can was being used as a measure for trade within the meaning of the sect., &, as it was not stamped, the resp. was liable to a penalty.—ROBINSON v. GOLDING (1910), 103 L. The scale belonged to the Post Office, & was the property of the Crown:—Held: the justices had no jurisdiction to hear & determine the matter of the information, because the provisions of the Act did not apply to scales which were the property of the Crown.—R. v. KENT JJ. 25. Liability of employer for acts of servant—Employee falsifying measure without employer's knowledge.]—Applts. supplied their servant with two correct measures to be used by him in supplying oil to customers on his rounds. For his own purposes & not in the interests of applts., & without their knowledge, the servant substituted for one of the correct measures with which he had been supplied a measure which had been discarded by applts. & which the servant had made unjust, & which he was using on his rounds when it was seized by an inspector of weights & measures. Applts. were thereupon charged with having such unjust measure in their possession for use for trade, & were convicted:—Held: the conviction must be quashed, as in the circumstances the possession of the unjust measure by the servant was not the possession of applts.—ANGLO-AMERICAN OIL CO., LTD. v. MANNING, [1908] 1 K. 32. —— —— Detachable ball used to correct adjustment—Capable of being filled with shot.]—Applt. was charged, before justices, with having a pair of unjust scales in his shop, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 28, which inflicts a penalty on "any person who shall have in his possession a steelyard or other weighing machine which shall on examination be found incorrect or otherwise unjust." The scales were correct as to balance in the state in which they were found by the inspector; but there was hanging upon the weight end of the beam a hollow brass ball, which could be unscrewed at the neck & contained shot; the ball was hung by a hook upon the beam, & was easily removed by merely lifting it off. If the ball were removed, or any of the shot taken out, the scales were unjust, & against the purchaser. The justices were of opinion that the ball was not part of the scales, as it was merely kept in its place by its own weight, & could be detached in an instant; & that as the shot could be removed from the ball & replaced at pleasure, it was not a proper instrument of adjustment; & they convicted applt.:—Held: the justices were justified in drawing the above inferences of fact, & the conviction was right.—CARR v. STRINGER (1868), L. 34. —— —— Incorrect in purchaser's favour.]—Applt. had in his possession a spring balance which on inspection was found to be incorrect & unjust, inasmuch as it gave seventeen ounces to the pound weight avoirdupois, being one ounce against the seller, & he was convicted on the ground that the balance could have been used for the purpose of buying as well as selling:—Held: 22 & 23 Vict. c. 56, s. 3, was intended to protect the public against persons selling, & did not apply to the case of a seller using a balance unjust to himself, & therefore the conviction was wrong.—BROOKE v. SHADGATE (1873), L. 35. Weight indicated by machine exceeding weight of article sold—Compensating weight on other scale—With knowledge of customer.]—W., a coal merchant, in using his weighing machine, which was correct in itself, used to put on one scale a barrow under the sack for the convenience of lifting the sack after it was weighed. The barrow, together with an empty sack, weighed seven pounds, & to compensate these a seven pounds iron weight was put on the opposite scale. H., a purchaser of coke, on weighing the same, knew of the use of this barrow, & what weight to allow for it, & assented to it, & was satisfied that after all the sacks were weighed, & the weight of the barrow deducted, he got full weight. The barrow was no part of the machine:—Held: there was nothing wrong in this use of a barrow, & it did not make the machine either incorrect or unjust, so long as the purchaser knew how it was used & allowed for.—WITHALL v. FRANCIS (1878), 42 J. 36. — Article weighed with wrapper.]—Resp. was charged under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25, with having in his possession for use for trade a weighing machine which was false or unjust. The machine, which was used for weighing tea, had on it, under the scoop in which the tea was placed, a piece of paper, the effect of which was to make the machine indicate a weight exceeding, by the weight of the paper, the weight of the tea in the scoop. The paper was placed where it was for the purpose of convenience & expedition in weighing, because it would take longer to weigh the tea if it were placed in the bag in which it was to be sold before being put into the scoop. The paper weighed less than the bag in which the tea was sold:—Held: as the machine, when used with the paper, indicated a weight in excess of the true weight of the tea sold, it was "false or unjust," within the meaning of sect. 25, & resp. ought to be convicted.—LANE v. RENDALL [1899] 2 Q. 37. ——— ———.]—Resps., who were wholesale tea merchants, were charged under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25, with using for trade two scales which were false or unjust. One of the scales, which were used for weighing tea, had a small metal disc affixed by wire to the arm of the scale on which the scoop for weighing the tea was placed, the disc being approximately equivalent in weight to the paper bag in which each quantity of tea was to be put; the effect was to make the quantity of tea required to turn the scale less by the weight of the metal disc than the weight on the opposite side of the scale. The second machine had, instead of a metal disc, a paper bag placed under the scoop in which the tea was placed for weighing; the effect was the same. After being weighed the tea was placed in paper bags. Tea was so weighed out only for retail dealers who requested to be supplied with it so packed, & who supplied the paper bags in which it was to be packed to resps.; each of the bags had printed on it an intimation that the weight of the paper was included. Directions were given by resps. to their servants not to use scales with a metal disc. or paper bag attached for any customers other than such retail dealers:—Held: the scales, being kept in a condition in which they could not weigh accurately that which was put in them to be weighed, were "false or unjust" within the meaning of the sect., notwithstanding the acquiescence of the purchasers in the mode of weighing.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. PAYNE & CO., [1904] 1 K. 38. ——— ———.]—Resps., who were wholesale tea merchants, received orders from some of their customers for quantities of tea to be weighed out in packets of a particular weight, & in those cases the tea was weighed out at the resp.'s warehouse in the following way, a beam weighing machine was used, & a girl in their employment placed a paper bag, supplied by the customer, under the goods scoop of the machine, where it remained whilst the tea was being weighed, the effect being that the tea put into the scoop weighed less, by the weight of the paper bag, than the weight on the opposite side of the machine. This mode of weighing was adopted at the request of the customer. The machine weighed justly & truly when the bag was not under the scoop. When the weighing was finished the girl put the machine, with the bag still under the scoop, aside on a shelf, & reported that the weighing was finished to resps.' forewoman, who shortly afterwards came round & took away the paper bag, & other precautions were taken to ensure that the bag should not be used for any other weighing. An inspector of weights & measures, on visiting the warehouse when one of those weighing operations had just been completed, found the machine on the shelf with the paper bag still under the scoop:—Held: resps. had committed the offence of "using" for trade a weighing machine which was false or unjust," contrary to Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25.

41. Gauged milk churn.]—Applt. was convicted, under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25, of having false measures in his possession for use for trade. He sold milk to a purchaser, & sent it by train in his own churns, which were fitted with gauges to indicate the number of gallons they contained, & the contract of carriage between applt. & the railway co. provided that they should be so fitted. By his contract with applt. the purchaser was entitled to have the churns regauged when he deemed it necessary. The magistrate found that, in the dealings between applt. & the purchaser, & between applt. & the railway co., the gauged churns were used as measures, & that two churns, purporting to contain sixteen gallons each, contained two pints less:—Held: the gauged churns were measures, which applt. had in his possession for use for trade, within the meaning of the Act, & he was rightly convicted.—HARRIS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, [1895] 1 Q. The churn was marked inside with circular discs of brass numbered at intervals with figures which were apparently intended for the measurement of barn gallons, but in fact did not accurately measure the number of barn gallons corresponding to the figures. The farmer stated that he took the quantity of milk from the marks in the churns & entered it against resp. co., & made out his accounts by reducing the number of barn gallons shown by the churn to imperial gallons. Evidence was given on behalf of resp. co. that they never measured by the discs, or intended the discs to be used as measures, & they were really only an index to the height of the milk in the churns, & that if they desired to measure

The justices found as a fact that the churn supplied to the farmer was at the time of its seizure in the possession of resp. co. for the purpose of trade, but as a vessel for the conveyance of milk only, & not as a measure, & they dismissed a summons against resp. co. under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 25, for having in their possession for use for trade a measure which was unjust:—Held: the justices were right.—BELLAMY v. GREAT WESTERN & METROPOLITAN DAIRIES, LTD. 67. —— Consent of local authority—General consent sufficient.]—Under Weights & Measures Act, 1904 (c. 28), s. 14, a separate consent by the local authority for each prosecution by an inspector under the Act is not necessary, but a general consent to the inspector prosecuting on any information, complaint, or proceeding arising under the Act is sufficient.—TYLER v. FERRIS, [1906] 1 K. 68. Liability for misconduct—Defacing stamps on unjust weights & measures—No seizure or detention.]—Resp., an inspector of weights & measures, having found that certain weights carried by a coal carman were unjust, defaced the official stamps thereon, but did not seize or detain them. He also ascertained that the weighing machine carried by the carman was unjust by testing it with some 56lb. weights on the van, & nine small local standard weights. Two informations having been preferred by applt. against resp. under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 49, alleging misconduct on the part of the respondent: —Held: the justices rightly dismissed both informations.—WEDDERBURN v. SMITH (1905), 92 L. 69. Constable acting as inspector of weights & measures—Fees not payable to Police Fund.]—A local Act directed that fees received by constables for the performance of occasional duties, or of any act in the execution of their duty for which a fee might be received, might be paid, by order of the justices for the county, to the credit of the Police Superannuation Fund:—Held: fees paid to such constables as inspectors of weights & measures did not come within the operation of the above sect., such fees not being paid to them in the execution of their duties as constables, but merely by viture of their appointment as inspectors of weights & measures.—R. v. KESTEVEN JJ. SECT. 1.—COAL.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

71. Claim of metage by customs—By corporation—In respect of ownership of port—Proof of claim.]—(1) The first count of the declaration stated, that the mayor & burgesses of the borough of Truro had from time whereof the memory of man was not to the contrary held & exercised, but the mayor of the said borough, or the lessee or lessees, farmer or farmers of the said mayor & burgesses for the time being, of their deputy or deputies, a certain ancient office, or place of meter, for the measuring of all coal imported by sea & brought within the limits of the port of Truro, to be there disposed of, & that from time whereof, etc., there had belonged to the said mayor & burgesses, etc., by reason of the said office, & ancient fee,

PART V. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

d. Sale by weight—Actual weighing dispensed with by consent—Estimated weight accepted—Whether contract illegal.]—The object of Weights & Measures Act, 1908, s. 21, is to secure that coal shall be sold by weight & not by measure, such as by sack, box, or other receptacle; but it does not require that the coal shall be actually weighed, & so long as the parties to a transaction sell or agree to sell by weight there is nothing to prevent them from dispensing with the actual process of weighing, & substituting therefor an estimated weight as a means of arriving at the price payable under the contract.—BIRKENHEAD & NORTHCOTE GAS CO., LTD. v. REDPATH & SONS, LTD., [1926] N. Z. L. R. 741.—N.Z.

reward, or toll, for the measuring as aforesaid, & for the keeping & maintaining measures, weights, etc., i.e. the fee, etc., of 4*d.* the chaldron, to be received for measuring or being ready & willing to measure, each chaldron of coal imported as aforesaid, to be disposed of by measure; & the fee, etc., of 8*d.* by the three tons, to be received for the weighing, or being ready & willing to weigh, each three tons of coal imported, etc., as aforesaid, to be disposed of by measure. The count then stated a demise by the corpn. to pltf. of the office of meter, with the fees & privileges belonging to it, under which pltf. claimed a toll from deft. in respect of a cargo of coals imported by him into the port of Truro. The second count claimed the same fee as a perquisite of the office, not stating it to be immemorial. The third count claimed a reasonable fee. Other counts claimed the toll as a duty receivable by the corpns. or their lessees, from all merchants importing coal by sea within the limits of the port. The jury found a written verdict in these terms: "We find for pltf.; & that the corpn. of T. have from time immemorial been possessed of, & have exercised, the office of meter, & have from time immemorial been possessed of, & have received for the performance of the duties of the office the sum of 4*d.* a chaldron on coal & culm": —Held: the finding sufficiently supported the first count of the declaration; it did not import that the corpn. was entitled only on actually measuring coals, & it did not disconnect their right to the toll from their ownership of the port, & their obligation to maintain it, in respect of which ownership & obligation only they could be entitled to the payment without performing some actual service for it.

(2) Two leases from the corpn. of the office & dues in question were put in, the first dated in 1752, in consideration of £631, the second in 1795. It was proved that the fee of 4*d.* a chaldron had been paid without interruption, from the year 1772 to 1828, although the meter never actually measured them himself, the only measurement being for the purpose of ascertaining the custom house duties payable on them. A corpn. book of the date of 1630 was also produced at the trial:—Held: this was a sufficient primâ facie evidence that the corpn. & office of meter were immemorial, & it sufficiently supported the immemorial claim for coals not actually metered.—JENKINS v. HARVEY (1835), 2 Cr. 72. —— —— Effect of statutory provision on customary claim.]—A declaration stated, that the corpn. of L. from time immemorial until Jan. 1, 1836, when 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 9, came into operation, had, by persons by them in that behalf appointed, the sole & exclusive privilege of measuring, &, from Jan. 1, 1836, of weighing, all coals imported into the port of L.; & also the right & privilege of appointing to perform such work a sufficient number of fit & proper persons, & from time to time of fixing a reasonable rate of payment for such work, to be proportioned, previous to Jan. 1, 1836, to the measured quantity, & subsequently to that day to the weight of the coals; such payments to be made to the persons who should do the work, & to be for their own use & benefit. The declaration then alleged a right & privilege of the corpn. that every owner of a vessel arriving in the port of L. with coals, should give notice to the corpn., in order that the work might be done by the said meters. It then averred that the corpn. had fixed a rate of payment for every score of tons weight, & had appointed a reasonable number of coal meters, of whom pltf. was one; deft. imported several tons of coal into the port of L., &, although it was his duty, on the arrival of a vessel, & before landing the coals, to give notice, he did not do so, whereby pltf. was prevented from weighing the coals, & of earning the amount payable in respect thereof. The pleas traversed the right of the corpn. to weigh the coals, & also the appointment of pltf. as coal meter. Evidence was given of a custom to measure all coals imported into the port of L. before Jan. 1, 1836, & after that date to weigh them; & that the corpn. had ordered that the meters should be paid at a rate per ton on coals weighed instead of per chaldron as before. In proof of pltf.'s appointment as a meter, he gave in evidence an entry, not under seal, in the corpn. books, stating that he was so appointed. Pltf. had ever since acted as a coal meter:—Held: (1) the right of the corpn. by custom to measure coals imported was not converted by 5 & 6 Will 4, c. 63, into a right to weigh; (2) as the payment in respect of the measurement was for the benefit of the meter only, he was an officer & not a mere servant of the corpn., & therefore an appointment under seal was necessary.—SMITH v. CARTWRIGHT (1851), 6 Exch. 927; 20 L. 74. Powers of navigation authorities—Under navigation Act—Levying rates by tonnage.]—A navigation Act directed, that any surplus of rates remaining in the hands of the comrs. should be annually invested in the funds until it should amount to £3,000, & that after that sum should be invested they should reduce the rates, so as they should not, together with the dividends of the £3,000, exceed the charges annually expended in carrying the Act into execution:—Held: (1) the comrs. had impliedly a power, after so reducing the rates, also to raise them again in case of necessity; (2) after the passing of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, the comrs. had power to levy the rates by the ton, they having been previously levied by the chaldron, without first applying to the sessions for an inquisition under sect. 14 of that Act.—GOODY v. PENNY (1842), 9 M. & W. 687; 11 L. 75. Person in charge of vehicle carrying coal—Whether obliged to weigh or assist in weighing—On request of inspector—Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 27.]—Under above sect. the person in charge of a vehicle in which coal is carried is under no obligation to weigh or assist in weighing the coal carried in the vehicle. The mere refusal, therefore, by him to assist in weighing the coal although required to do so by an officer of the local authority, does not constitute an obstruction of the weighing within above sect., sub-sect. 2.—SWALLOW v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, [1916] 1 K. SUB-SECT. 2.—WEIGHT TICKET.

See Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), ss. 20, 21, 22.

76. Delivery of over two hundredweight by means of vehicle—Delivery of large quantity by several vehicles—Whether ticket must be delivered with each vehicle.]—A truckload of coal bought at the rate of 16*s.* per ton, for delivery on the premises of the purchaser, was delivered by means of three carts taking two journeys each, & carrying each more than 2 cwt. of coal. On the unloading of the carts at the end of the first journey no ticket was delivered; but on the unloading of the carts at the end of the second journey a single ticket was delivered, showing only the weight of the entire truckload bought, but not the weight delivered by any of the carts on either journey, nor the tare weight of any of the carts:—Held: the seller had not complied with the provisions of Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 21.—STANGOE v. SLATTER (1896), 60 J. 77. —— —— ——.]—Resps., having sold to a purchaser 12 tons of coal, delivered a portion of the coal in sacks in a vehicle to the purchaser on Sept. 23, 1907, & at the same time, before any part of the coal was unloaded, gave to the purchaser a ticket according to the form in Schedule III. to Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), for the delivery of 12 tons of coal in 240 sacks, each sack containing 1 cwt. On Oct. 2, 1907, 30 sacks of coal, each sack containing 1 cwt. being the remaining portion of the 12 tons, were sent by resps. in a vehicle for delivery to the purchaser, & were delivered to him. No separate ticket was delivered or sent to the purchaser in respect of the thirty sacks of coal:—Held: the coal having been delivered in sacks & a ticket for the entire quantity having been delivered to the purchaser on Sept. 23 the failure of resps. to give a separate ticket in respect of the coal delivered on Oct. 2 did not constitute a breach of the provisions of Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 21.—KYLE v. DUNSDON, [1908] 2 K. 78. —— Coal brought from lorry in street—Carried into house at purchaser's request—Constitutes "delivery by means of vehicle."]—Applt., a coal dealer, while in charge of a horse & lorry in a street, having sacks of coal on the lorry, was asked by a woman to bring her 3 sacks of coal. Applt. & his assistant then carried 3 sacks from the lorry to the woman's house. Each of the sacks contained 1 cwt., & had a metal label thereon stating that the sack contained that weight of coal. No ticket or note was delivered to the woman showing the quantity of coal delivered:—Held: (1) Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 21, is not limited in its application to the delivery of coal in fulfilment of a contract previously entered into; (2) there was a "delivery by means of a vehicle," notwithstanding that the delivery was partially effected by applt. & his assistant carrying the coal from the vehicle to the purchaser's house; & (3) applt., in failing to deliver a ticket or note to the purchaser, had contravened sect. 21.—LUCAS v. HODSON, [1919] 1 K. B. 6; 88 L. J. K. B. 82; 119 L. T. 742; 83 J. P. 15; 35 T. L. R. 10; 16 L. G. R. 875; 26 Cox, C. C. 336, D. C.

79. —— Coal & cart weighed on premises of purchaser—Ticket may be filled in at same time.]—By an agreement between a firm of coal merchants & the committee of an asylum all coal supplied to the asylum was to be weighed on the asylum weighbridge, & the weight there ascertained before delivery was accepted by the committee. At the time of weighing a cartload of coal in course of delivery at the asylum, the carter had in his possession a book of forms containing tickets in the form in the schedule, but in which the weights which were required to be entered were left in blank; at the conclusion of the weighing, & before any part of the coal was unloaded, the purchasers' storekeeper, in pursuance of the arrangement between the parties, filled in upon the ticket the weight of the coal & vehicle, the tare weight of the vehicle & the net weight of coal delivered; the ticket was then detached from the book, & handed by the carter to the storekeeper, & the coal was unloaded:—Held: the provisions of Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 21, had been complied with by the sellers, & they could not be convicted under that sect. for not delivering to the purchaser before any part of the coal was unloaded a ticket in the form in Schedule III. to the Act.—EDWARDS v. PURNELL, [1899] 1 Q. 80. —— Form of ticket—Seller's name—Business name sufficient.]—Applt. was convicted for default in compliance with the provisions of Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 21, with respect to the delivery of a ticket with a ton of coal delivered by him, by means of a vehicle, to a purchaser. He had delivered a ticket in the form in Schedule III. to the Act; in the place for the name of the seller were inserted the words, "Sellers the Co-operative Coal co." This was the name under which applt. traded, but there was no real co. There was no intent to defraud:—Held: the provisions in the Act, requiring the insertion in the ticket of the seller's name, was sufficiently complied with by the insertion of the name under which applt. carried on his business, & the conviction was wrong.—CAMERON v. TYLER, [1899] 2 Q. —— Weight of sacks incorrect—Total weight as per ticket correct.]—A quantity of coal exceeding 2 cwt. was in course of being delivered from a vehicle to a purchaser & the ticket delivered therewith expressed that the purchaser would receive two tons of coals in 20 sacks each containing 2 cwt. When 11 of the sacks had been delivered the remaining sacks were weighed, & some were found to contain less & some more than 2 cwt. each, but the deficiency in those weighed exceeded the excess. The magistrate found as a matter of fact that the whole quantity of 2 tons was delivered:—Held: as the whole quantity expressed in the ticket had in fact been delivered, the seller could not, by reason of some of the sacks containing less than 2 cwt. each, be convicted under Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 21, of having delivered a less quantity of coal than the quantity expressed in the ticket.—GODFREY v. RADFORD (1896), 75 L. T. 224; 60 J. P. 615; 18 Cox, C. C. 417, D. C.

82. —— Sale in vehicle in bulk—Correct weight of vehicle—How ascertained.]—When coal is conveyed for delivery on sale in bulk, in a vehicle not belonging to the purchaser, the "correct weight," which is required by Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 22, to be inserted in the ticket which is to be given to the purchaser, is the weight as ascertained at the place from which the coal is brought, & not the weight at the time of delivery.—KNOWLES & SONS v. SINCLAIR, [1898] 1 Q. " :—Held : the true test whether the vehicle had been weighed so recently & under such circumstances that its correct weight had been ascertained.

Semble : weighing at reasonable intervals was not the proper test, but the waggon need not be weighed before every delivery.—BEARDSLEY v. PIKE & SONS (1904), 90 L. T. 652 ; 68 J. P. 273 ; 2 L. G. R. 710 ; 20 Cox, C. C. 648, D. C.

SUB-SECT. 3.—BYE-LAWS.

See Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 28.

84. Validity—Bye-law of harbour authority—Monopoly of metage.]—Under a local harbour Act the corpn. of P. had power to make bye-laws regulating their officers in the affairs of the wharf, & for regulating porters, carmen, etc. By a bye-law, if any other than the meters appointed by the corpn. weighed coals, etc., unladen from the wharf, he shall incur a penalty of 40*s.* :—Held : the bye-law was too extensive, inasmuch as it compelled third parties buying & selling to accept the corpn. meter for weighing of goods.—ALDRIDGE v. WHITING (1866), 30 J. P. 309.

85. —— Vehicles delivering for sale—To carry weighing machine—Kind of machine not particularised.]—In pursuance of Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 28, a county council framed & published a bye-law that the person in charge of every vehicle carrying coal for sale on delivery to a purchaser should carry therewith a weighing instrument of " a form approved " :—Held : the bye-law was neither vague nor invalid for uncertainty, in that it did not specify the identical weighing machine to be carried, &, justices who had, on this ground, declined to convict a coal dealer of an offence under it, had gone beyond their jurisdiction in entertaining the question of vagueness or uncertainty of language.—MARTIN v. CLARKE (1893), 62 L. 90. —— —— ——.]—A bye-law made under Weights & Measures Act, 1889 (c. 21), s. 28, provided that every person carrying coal for sale in a vehicle should carry therewith " a correct weighing instrument . . . for the purpose of weighing any quantity of coal not exceeding 2 cwt." Resp., a coal dealer, was carrying bags of coal in his cart for sale, some of which bags purported to contain 1 cwt., & others ½ cwt. He had with him a correct set of scales, but only one weight weighing ½ cwt. :—Held : the bye-law & statute contemplated that the weighing instrument should be capable of weighing any bag of coal in the cart by a single operation, & that as a cwt. bag of coal could not be weighed with ½ cwt. weight in less than two operations, a breach of the law had been committed.—CRICK v. NICHOLLS, [1905] 1 K. 93. Form & contents of certificate—Name of colliery—Name by which coal known insufficient.]—In an action of debt to recover a penalty for not sending a certificate, the declaration alleged, that "defts. did not send a certificate signed by defts., containing the usual name of the colliery out of which the coals were brought, & the price paid by the master for such coals then sold & loaded on board the ship":—Held: (1) it was not necessary to prove at the trial that any coals had been actually sold; (2) the description in the certificate being "Barrett's Wallsend Coals," such certificate was bad for not containing the usual name of the colliery out of which the coals were gotten; (3) it was no ground for a new trial, that the declaration set out more than one particular in which the certificate was deficient, although there was no evidence given at the trial in support of one of those particulars; (4) the declaration was bad in arrest of judgment, for not averring that the defts. were "the fitters" of the coals.—GRANT v. MATTHEWSON (1841), 8 Scott, N. 96. Sale in sacks—Method of weighing.]—(1) London Coal Act, 1831 (c. lxxvi), s. 54, directs carmen of waggons, etc., in which coals are carried in sacks for delivery to purchasers in London, etc., to weigh, if required, each sack, "with the coals therein, & afterwards to weigh in like manner each sack without any coals therein":—Held: to weigh each sack of coals in one scale against weights in the other scale equal to the proper weight of a sack of coals, together with an empty sack, is not a legal weighing within the Act.

(2) Sect. 47 required a seller's ticket to be delivered to the purchaser of coals, imposing a penalty of not exceeding £20 on neglect, & sect. 77, enacted, that all penalties not exceeding £25 should be levied & recovered before any justice or justices of the peace. 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci, repealed so much of London Coal Act, 1831 (c. lxxvi) as related to the delivery of a seller's ticket, & proceeded by a new enactment, sect. 3, to require a certain form of a seller's ticket to be delivered, under a penalty not exceeding £20, but did not subjoin any provision for recovering the penalty by any individual:—Held: that no action could be maintained for this penalty by the buyer of coals, where no seller's ticket was delivered.—MEREDITH v. HOLMAN (1847), 16 M. & W. 798; 16 L. In an action for penalties under London Coal Act, 1831 (c. lxxvi), in respect of a deficiency of weight in the sacks so weighed:—Held: as the method of weighing prescribed by the sect.—viz., weighing the sacks "both with & without the coals therein" had not been followed, pltf. was not entitled to recover.—SMITH v. WOOD (1889), 24 Q. 114. ·.]—(1) A person went into a grocer's shop & asked for 4 oz. of tea. The grocer's assistant, acting under the instructions of the grocer, put some tea into a paper wrapper, & weighed both tea & wrapper together in the presence of the purchaser, & then delivered it to him. The tea thus supplied was less than the 4 oz. asked for by the weight of the paper which was included in the 4 oz. The scales were just & accurate, & gave the gross weight of the tea & paper correctly.

Upon an information under Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 26, against the grocer for being a party to wilfully committing a fraud in using the scale by adding the paper wrapper to the goods pan when weighing the tea, the justices refused to receive evidence tendered to show that it was the custom or usage for grocers to weigh tea in the paper wrapper in which it was sold, & convicted :—Held : the mere fact of weighing the tea with the wrapper included would not necessarily constitute the offence under sect. 26 of wilfully committing a fraud in the use of the scales if the purchaser knew that the weight of the wrapper was included in the weight ; & having regard to the fact that the weighing was done in the presence of the purchaser, before the conviction could be sustained the case required further consideration as to whether what was done amounted to a wilfully fraudulent use of the scales ; (2) evidence of the alleged custom ought to have been admitted, as having a bearing on the question whether there had been a wilful commission of a fraud within the meaning of the sect.—KING v. SPENCER (1904), 91 L. The scales were just & accurate, & gave the weight of each package correctly. Subsequently applt. supplied one of those packages to a purchaser who had asked for one pound of sugar. The sugar without the paper wrapper weighed three-quarters of an ounce less than one pound :—Held : as there had been no fraudulent using or manipulation of the scales in the act of weighing, Weights & Measures Act, 1878 (c. 49), s. 26, did not apply, & applt. could not be convicted of the offence specified therein.

The wrong & mischief done was not in giving to the buyer a quantity which had been untruly weighed but in selling to him as one pound of sugar that which was not one pound of sugar but was one pound of sugar & paper combined (KENNEDY, J.).—STONE v. TYLER, [1905] 1 K. In an action brought by a farmer to recover the price of fifteen firkins of butter sold by him to deft., it appeared that the firkins were not marked according to the Act :—Held : (1) the provisions which required the vessel to be branded with the name of the cooper, seller, etc., being intended for the protection of the public against fraud, indirectly prohibited any sale of butter in vessels not properly marked ; (2) the subject-matter of this contract was in such a state, from the vessels, not being properly marked, that the sale of it was forbidden by Act of Parliament ; & consequently, the contract of sale was void, & pltf. could not recover ; (3) although there was a penalty imposed in the same clause of the Act, which directed the thing to be done, yet the remedy of the public against a person infringing the clause was not thereby limited to a proceeding for the penalty ; but the clause might be used against him as a defence to an action.—FORSTER v. TAYLOR (1834), 5 B. & Ad. 887 ; 110 E. PART VIII. SECT. 3.

138 i. Whether measurement in direct line—Or nearest means of access.]—The distance of a party's residence must be computed, for the purposes of the rules of ct., according to the ordinary mode of travelling, & not "as the crow flies."—FRASER v. NOTT (1857), 2 Legge, 1019.—AUS.

138 ii. ——.]—In computing the artificial extension of the geographical limits of the jurisdiction of cts. of petty sessions given by Justices Act, 1886, s. 139, distance is to be measured in a straight line from the boundary of the district.—UNION BANK v. BROOM, [1904] St. R. Qd. 215.—AUS.

d. Distance by road—Distance by miles.]—Measurement of distance by road in Acts of Parliament need not be by public roads only. Measurement of distance by miles applies to places reached by sea as well as land.—ALLEN v. GROSSKREUTZ, Ex p. GROSSKREUTZ, [1910] St. R. Qd. 26.—AUS.

within the jurisdiction of the county ct. within which deft. carried on his business at the time of the action brought, may be reviewed by the ct.

Although, in such a case, the onus of showing that deft. does not carry on his business within the limits, is by the statute cast upon pltf., slight evidence of the fact will be enough to call upon deft. by his affidavit distinctly to negative it.

Semble, the twenty miles mentioned in 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 128, are to be measured in a straight line on the horizontal plane from point to point, or, as it is popularly called, "as the crow flies."—STOKES v. GRISSELL (1854), 14 C. 144. —— ——.]—A turnpike Act provided that no toll gate should be erected, nor any toll taken, within three miles of B. The road authorised by that Act did not extend to B., but there was a communication between its termination & B. by another turnpike road, & also by a public road made since the Act was passed:—Held: under these circumstances the three miles within which toll gates could not be erected were to be measured from B. in a straight line on a horizontal plane, & not along any of the roads.—JEWEL v. STEAD (1856), 6 E. & B. 350; 25 L. 145. Thoroughfare by ferry.]—Applt. was convicted of having supplied refreshment at prohibited hours to persons not being bonâ fide travellers.

By 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49, s. 10, "A person shall not be deemed a bonâ fide traveller unless the place where he lodged the preceding night is at least three miles from the place where he demands to be supplied with liquor, such distance to be calculated by the nearest public throughfare."

Applt.'s licensed house is on the opposite shore of the Southampton Water from the town, & is distant from the town by water over a mile, & by the nearest road eight miles. There is an ancient ferry from the town appurtenant to applt.'s house, & a toll is also paid to him by all persons landing from boats not belonging to him. The persons supplied with refreshment had lodged the night before in the town, & had crossed the water in their own boats:—Held: the Southampton Water was a public throughfare within sect. 10, & the conviction was right.—COULBERT v. TROKE (1875), 1 Q. 156. ——.]—The owner of a certain settled estate in Birmingham granted a building lease of certain premises & the site thereof to pltf. for a term of ninety-nine years, reserving, nevertheless, unto the lessor & his lessees & tenants full right to build to any height upon the land adjoining the demised premises notwithstanding such building might obstruct any light on the land demised. Defts. had an agreement for a lease for ninety-nine years from the then owner of the same estate of land opposite pltf.'s house & premises, but separated therefrom by a party passage 10 feet wide. They intended to erect buildings on the other side of the narrow passage to a height of 62 feet, which would admittedly seriously interfere with pltf.'s uninterrupted enjoyment of access of light for the statutory period. In an action by pltf. for an injunction to restrain this contemplated obstruction to his light & air:—Held: on the facts the effect of the reservation in pltf.'s lease extended to the land on the other side of the party passage & was "adjoining" land within the meaning of the clause.—FOSTER v. LYONS & CO., [1927] 1 Ch. 219; 96 L. SECT. 1.—DEFINITIONS AND INTERPRETATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. "Release."]—ANON. (1545), 1 And. 33; 123 E. R. 339.

2. "Devise" — Primarily applicable to real property.]—"The only other word relied on as carrying the real estate is 'devise,' which though technically considered is more applicable to real than personal property, it might yet be easily mistaken for bequeath by an uninformed testatrix" (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.).—CAMFIELD v. GILBERT (1803), 3 East, 516; 102 E. R. 694.

Annotations:—Refd. Hall v. Hall, [1892] 1 Ch. 361. Mentd. Doe d. Andrew v. Lainchbury (1809), 11 East, 290; Doe d. Hick v. Dring (1814), 2 M. & S. 448; Edwards v. Barnes (1835), 2 Scott, 411; Doe d. Haw v. Earles (1846), 15 M. & W. 450; Smyth v. Smyth (1878), 8 Ch. D. 561.

3. —— ——.]—The word "devise" is properly applicable to a disposition of real estate which is primâ facie its meaning" (DOMILLY, M.R.).—PHILLIPS v. BEAL (1858), 25 Beav. 25; 53 E. R. 545.

4. —— Use of word "devise"—As indicating intention to dispose of real estate.]—Testator "gave, devised, & bequeathed" to his wife all his "furniture, goods, chattels, & effects" which he might be possessed of at his decease whatsoever the same might be or wheresoever the same might be situate, & authorised her to raise any money that might be necessary, & requested her to pay as soon as might be convenient all his just debts & funeral expenses; & after the death of his wife he "gave, devised, & bequeathed," to be equally divided amongst three of his children until they should attain twenty-one," the furniture & moneys, or any property" which his wife might have become entitled to through his will or through any other source; & after they had attained twenty-one he directed that "the furniture, goods, chattels, & effects," whatsoever the same might be or wheresoever it might be situate, & any moneys his wife might be entitled to at the time of his decease should be equally divided amongst his six children. Testator's property consisted substantially of an undivided moiety of real estate, to which he was entitled in possession, his personalty being of very trifling amount:—Held: taking into consideration the use by testator of the words "devise," "wheresoever situate," & "property," & the direction to his wife to pay all his debts & funeral expenses, & other expressions in the will, there was enough to show an intention that testator's real estate, should be included under the word "effects," & therefore the undivided moiety passed by the will.—HALL v. HALL, [1892] 1 Ch. 361; 61 L. J. Ch. 289; 66 L. T. 206; 40 W. R. 277; 36 Sol. Jo. 200, C. A.

Annotation:—Refd. Re Fisher, Allan v. Fisher (1902), 46 Sol. Jo. 297.

5. "Bequeath"— Not in itself a technical word—Primarily applicable to testamentary disposition.]—The word "bequeathed" (though not in itself a technical word), is primarily applicable only to property passing under a testamentary disposition.

Testatrix, a married woman, had under her marriage settlement an absolute power of appointment over certain funds. By her will in 1867, she specifically appointed such funds, & then proceeded as follows: "I constitute & appoint E. my residuary legatee to any property which has been bequeathed to me & which is not mentioned in this will." The father of testatrix, by his will in 1873, bequeathed to her a certain sum of stock, but he subsequently determined to give it to her in his lifetime, & accordingly transferred it to the trustees of her marriage settlement:—Held: this sum of stock did not pass to E. under the residuary gift contained in the will of testatrix.—Re ARMSTRONG, MARESCAUX v. ARMSTRONG (1879), 49 L. J. Ch. 53; 42 L. T. 823.

SUB-SECT. 2.—WORDS "WILL," "TESTAMENT," AND TESTAMENTARY INSTRUMENT.

6. "Testament"—Includes will & codicils.]—(1) "Testament" includes a will, codicils, etc.; (2) "Instrument" signifies the will alone.—FULLER v. HOOPER (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 242; 28 E. R. 156, L. C.

7. "Instrument"—Will alone.]—FULLER v. HOOPER, No. 6, ante.

8. "Last will"—Word of form only.]—(1) "With regard to the observation made in the term 'last will'; the answer given was the true one; it is a general term signifying only 'a will'" (GROSE, J.).

(2) Neither of these instruments was a will, properly so called, until the death of the devisors; both were ambulatory until that time & either of them was capable of being destroyed or set up by the devisor (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—WALPOLE (LORD) v. CHOLMONDELEY (EARL) (1797), 7 Term Rep. 138; 101 E. 10. —— —— Last will & testament."]—(1) Instruments appearing, primâ facie, to be testamentary, shall be deemed testamentary until the contrary is shown.

(2) It is stated that one of these documents—that of 1842—begins with the words "This is my last will & testament . . . LAWRENCE, J., in the same case observed that the phrase "last will" was "merely one of form & meaning no more than that the instrument was the last of those instruments which the testator had executed." . . . I do not apprehend that in reality these words ought to receive any weight whatever in directing this question (LORD TRURO).—STODDART v. GRANT (1852), 1 Macq. 163; 19 L. T. O. S. 305, H. L.

11. "Will"—Definition & nature.]—(1) If a man give, by deed, his leasehold & personal property to trustees, for the use of himself for life, & of several persons therein named at his death, with a power of revocation reserved never having parted with the deed or with any part of the property during his life, & confirming, in most respects, such disposition of it by will at his death; those two instruments will be considered as to be taken & construed together as testamentary instruments.

(2) In order to constitute the essence of a will, it must be an instrument which a man voluntarily makes; it is an expression of his will, & it is an expression of his will touching the disposition of his property at the time of his death & only at the time of his death (GRAHAM, B.).—A.-G. v. JONES & BARTLETT (1817), 3 Price, 368; 146 E. R. 291.

12. —— "This my will"—Will & codicils.]—Testatrix by her will made in 1894 gave a number of specific & pecuniary legacies & disposed of her residuary personal estate, & directed that all bequests & legacies given to married women should be for their separate use, & that, "no legacy given by this my will shall lapse by reason of the death of the legatee before me, but shall take effect as if the death of such legatee had happened immediately after my death, & such legacy shall accordingly pass to the legal personal representative of such deceased legatee." Testatrix made seven codicils to her will, each of which contained an express formal clause confirming in other respects her will & any previous codicil or codicils, & died in 1915:—Held: the expression "this my will" referring not to the particular instrument, but to the testamentary disposition constituted by the will & codicils at the date of testatrix's death.—Re SMITH, PRADA v. VANDROY, [1916] 2 Ch. 368; 85 L. I give B. this written document as I am afraid my exors. will not put my will into ct." :—Held: the exors. died in the lifetime of the deceased. SUB-SECT. 2.—INSTRUMENTS CONDITIONALLY TESTAMENTARY.

A. What Amounts to a Conditional Will.

(a) In General.

36. Tests for ascertainment.]—A test for ascertaining whether a will is contingent is the question whether the disposition of property is dependent upon the happening of some event or calamity referred to in the will, or whether the imminence of such event or calamity is merely a reason for making the will. In the former case the will is contingent; in the latter it is not.—In the Goods of PORTER (1869), L. R. 2 P. & D. 22; 39 L. J. P. & M. 12; 21 L. T. 680; 34 J. P. 247; 18 W. R. 231.

37. ——.]—Deceased, a military officer on active service, wrote to his sister a letter in which he made use of the following language: "If we remain here taking pahs for some time to come the chances are in favour of more of use being killed, & as I may not have another opportunity of saying what I wish to be done with any little money I may possess in case of an accident, I wish to make everything I possess over to you. In the first place there is money at. . . . Keep this until I ask you for it":—Held: the disposition of deceased's property was not dependent on his death while on active service; the document was not therefore a conditional will.

If the will is clearly expressed to take effect only on the happening, or not happening, of any event, cadit quæstio, it is conditional. If testator says, in effect, that he is led to make his will by reason of the uncertainty of life in general, or for some special reason, cadit quæstio, it is not conditional (JEUNE, P.).—In the Goods of SPRATT, [1897] P. 28; 66 L. J. P. 25; 75 L. T. 518; 45 W. R. 159; 13 T. L. R. 67.

38. ——.]—(1) Where a will is made in terms subject to the happening of a certain event, that event must occur to render the will operative; whereas, if the possibility of an event happening is stated merely as the reason for making the will, it becomes operative whether the event happen or not.

For instance, if a man write in his will "If I die to-morrow my will is" so & so, his death must occur on the morrow to make the will operative; but if the words be "Lest I die to-morrow" . . . the document will be operative whether he die or not on the morrow.

(2) The question whether a testamentary document is conditional or not depends on the wording of the document itself, &, if it can be said that the language used therein is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible to assist the ct. in clearing up the ambiguity.

(3) The ct. admitted evidence of declarations by testator, made down to within a short time before he died, to the effect that the will in question was all right, & that his wife would take all he had to leave.—In the Estate of VINES, VINES v. VINES, [1910] P. 147; 79 L. J. P. 25; 102 L. T. 141; 26 T. L. R. 257; 54 Sol. Jo. 272.

39. "Lest I should die before next sun."]—A will written eighteen years before testator's death, containing this passage, "lest I should die before the next sun I make this my last will"; admitted to probate, the ct. holding the disposition not contingent, & adherence shown by careful preservation.—BURTON v. COLLINGWOOD (1832), 4 Hag. 41. 42. Will dependent on consent of another person—Option to wife to add codicil.]—Testator wrote a codicil with his own hand, which concluded as follows:—"I give my wife the option of adding this codicil to my will or not, as she may think proper or necessary":—Held: the validity of this paper was conditional on the assent of the wife, & as she elected not to avail herself of its provisions, it ought not to be included in the probate.—In the Goods of SMITH (1869), L. R. 1 P. & D. 717; 38 L. J. P. & M. 85; 21 L. T. 340; 33 J. P. 712; 17 W. R. 1110.

with his wife, executed a joint will, which was expressed to take effect in case they should be called out of the world at one & the same time & by one & the same accident. By this will they revoked all former wills. Deceased died in the lifetime of his wife:—Held: the joint will was dependent upon a contingency which did not happen, & was inoperative even to revoke a previous will.—In the Goods of HUGO (1877), 2 P. 44. ——.]—Testator, being about to sail with his wife from Calcutta to England, wrote a letter to his brother in England, which was in form a good testamentary document at Scots law, & contained the following: "If anything happens to us on the way my will has been accidentally packed away in a tin box to which I cannot now get access, as I forget which box it has been put into. However, if we both come to grief, I appoint you my exor.; if I only then in conjunction with Nan." The letter then proceeded to deal with the disposition of his estate after his wife's death, in the event of her surviving him. Neither testator not his wife died during the voyage:—Held: the letter was not conditional, but was a valid testamentary document, & must be admitted to probate.—HALFORD v. HALFORD, [1897] P. 36; 66 L. 47. Contemplation of death—Journey to Ireland.]—Testator devises that if he dies before he returns from Ireland, his estate shall be sold, etc., he does return, & dies, & this will is found in his keeping at his death, it was only a contingent devise, & shall not take effect.

None of the collateral proofs as to his taking notice of the will, etc., can be taken into consideration, unless some act was done by him to republish; or to defeat the condition that was annexed to it before, & it ought not to be supported by parol proof against Stat. Frauds, either in law or equity (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—PARSONS v. LANOE (1748), 1 Wils. 243; Amb. 557; 1 Ves. Sen. 189; 95 E. R. 597, L. C.

70. —— Will inoperative.]—A married woman had a power under her marriage settlement to dispose of certain property by will in case there were no children of the marriage, or they all died under age, or in the lifetime of her husband. She executed a will in which she recited the conditions of her power, & out of the trust funds gave an annuity to a particular individual, & the rest to her husband absolutely. She survived her husband & the annuitant, but did not re-execute her will. There were several children of the marriage, who attained their respective majorities, & survived their mother, so that the will was inoperative. The ct. refused to grant administration with the will annexed to one of the children, as he had no interest under the will, but granted to him a general administration of deceased's his will as follows :—"As I am about to leave home for B., should any accident, etc., take me out of this world, I will, etc." Testator went to B. the same day, & returned home in a week without meeting any accident, & did not again leave Ireland, or make any other will, until his death, more than 6 years afterwards :—the will was not conditional

The sum of money was settled, & the marriage took place on the faith of the representation in the letter. By his will testator made a substantial provision for his son, but much less then equal to those made for his other children:—Held: the promise was so vague as to the amount that, consistently with it, testator might have given all his property to a stranger, & the promise was satisfied by the provision in the will & codicil.—KAY v. CROOK (1857), 3 Sm. & G. 407; 29 L. J. thereupon verbally promised that if pltf. would complete the purchase, he would devise to pltf. & his son certain other lands which belonged to him, & would also consent that the purchase-money should be reduced to £1,800. Pltf. alleged that he completed the purchase relying upon that verbal promise. J. made a will in favour of pltf. & his son as agreed, but revoked it by a subsequent will. In an action against the estate of J. to recover damages for breach of the alleged verbal agreement :— Held : the part performance relied on by pltf., namely, the completion of the purchase, being referable not to any agreement to refrain from repudiating the previous contract of purchase, but to that previous contract itself, did not constitute such a part performance of the alleged verbal agreement as to exclude the operation of Stat. She afterwards became bkpt. & obtained her discharge. After her discharge she revoked her will, & made another appointing the sum of money to another person :—Held : the covenant not to revoke the will was divisible, & was not wholly void, although in one alternative it was in restraint of marriage.

The covenant is, as was pointed out by Mr. Justice Kay, divisible. 102. — Effect of mistake—Each party signing will of other.]—Two mutual wills were drawn up, but through error each testatrix signed the other's will : Held : the will of one now dead was not entitled to probate.

Two ladies live together, & they determine to make what I may call mutual wills. The wills are the same, mutatis mutandis ; they were drawn up & executed, that is, if executed they are, at one & the same time, but unfortunately each signs the other's will ; after the death of one of them the solr. alters them, so as to make the will of one appear as that of the other. their property & executed mutual wills in pursuance of that arrangement, the one of them who predeceases the other dies with the implied promise of the survivor that the arrangement shall hold good; & if the survivor, after taking a benefit under the arrangement, alters his will, his personal representative takes the property upon trust to perform the contract, for the will of the one who has died first has, by the death, become irrevocable. But, on the contrary, where the one who dies first has departed from the bargain by executing a fresh will revoking the former one, the survivor, who has, on the death of the other party to the arrangement, notice of the alteration, cannot claim to have the later will of the deceased set aside or modified, either by way of declaration of trust or otherwise.—STONE v. HOSKINS, [1905] P. 194; 74 L. 108. —— —— ——.]—The fact that a husband & wife have simultaneously made mutual wills, giving each to the other a life interest with similar provisions in remainder, is not in itself evidence of an agreement not to revoke the wills; in the absence of a definite agreement to that effect there is no implied trust precluding the wife from making a fresh will inconsistent with her former will, even though her husband has died & she has taken the benefits conferred by his will. Although by the mutual wills the wife expressly has refrained from exercising a power of appointment which her husband had only in default of her exercising it, & he has appointed, the wife can both take the benefit of her husband's will & exercise her power of appointment, unless the language of his will either puts her to her election, or places her in the position of seeking at the same time to approbate & reprobate its provisions.—GRAY v. PERPETUAL TRUSTEE CO., [1928] A. SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

113. Exclusion of persons entitled on intestacy—What words sufficient—Negative words.]—S. by his will gave to A. & B., whom he called his wife's children, not owning them to be his, 10*s.* a piece, & no more; to the children which he did own he gave considerable legacies & appointed N. his exor., but made no disposition of the surplus of his personal estate. On a bill brought for a distribution of this surplus, it was decreed to be divided amongst all the children equally; but on an appeal it was held that A. & B. were excluded, & therefore the decree as to them was reversed.—VACHELL v. BRETON (1706), 5 Bro. 114. ——— ——— Words of dislike or anger.]—Neither an heir-at-law, nor by parity of reasoning next of kin, can be barred by anything but a disposition of the heritable subject or personal estate, to some person capable of taking. Notwithstanding all words of anger & dislike applied to the heir, he will take what is not disposed of. It is impossible to make a different rule as to the personal estate, with regard to what is not disposed of (LORD LOUGHBOROUGH, C.).—PICKERING v. STAMFORD (LORD) (1797), 3 Ves. 492; 30 E. 116. Exclusion of children—Power to leave property to strangers.]—A man, moved by capricious, frivolous, mean, or even bad motives, may disinherit wholly or partially his children, & leave his property to strangers. He may take an unduly harsh view of the character & conduct of his children, but there is a limit beyond which it will cease to be a question of harsh, unreasonable judgment, & then the repulsion which a parent exhibits to his child must be held to proceed from some mental defect. If such repulsion, amounting to a delusion as to character, is shown to have existed previous to the execution of his will, it will be for the party setting up that document to establish that it was inoperative when the will was made, & the jury, in determining whether or not the delusion was operative, will have regard to the contents of the will & the circumstances surrounding the execution of it.—BOUGHTON v. KNIGHT (1873), L. 131. Partnership articles.]—A tradesman bequeathed his residuary estate, including his stock-in-trade, to trustees, with a direction to convert into money all such parts as should not consist of leaseholds or money in the funds ; & to invest the same & pay the annual income to S., his wife ; & after her decease, to M., his wife's sister ; & after the decease of the survivor of S. & M., he gave his residuary estate to another person absolutely. After the date of the will M. married, & her husband & testator entered into partnership, under articles, which contained a proviso, that if testator should die during the partnership, leaving a widow surviving, such widow might, if she should think fit, continue to carry on the partnership business with the surviving partner, & should be entitled to testator's share in the profits & excess of capital; & if testator should leave no widow, or his widow should not desire to enter into the business, or if the other partner should die during the partnership, the surviving partner to take upon himself the partnership business & property, accounting & paying for the same as therein directed. Testator died, leaving his widow, who, under this provision, claimed his interest in the partnership:—Held: the provision in the articles took testator's share of the business wholly out of the provisions of the will, & the widow became entitled, under the partnership articles, to such share.—PAGE v. COX (1852), 10 Hare, 163; 68 E. 132. ——.]—Articles of partnership between two solrs. provided that the partnership should be for the term of ten years from May 1, 1875, if both the partners should so long live. The partnership was also made determinable by notice. There was a further provision that from the determination of the partnership the retiring partner, his exors. or administrators, or the exors. or administrators of deceased partner, should be entitled to receive out of the net profits of the partnership business, during so much, if any, of the term of five years from May 1, 1880, as should remain after the determination of the partnership, the yearly sum of £350, & during so much, if any, of the term of five years from May 1, 1885, as either the retiring partner, or a widow of the retiring or deceased partner, should be living, the yearly sum of £250, any sum which might under this provision for the time being become payable to the exors. or administrator of a deceased partner to be applied in such manner as such partner should by deed or will direct for the benefit of his widow & children, & in default of such direction to be paid to such widow, if living, for her own benefit. It was further provided that the annuity should, so far as legally might be, be constituted a charge on the net profits of the business. One of the partners died in 1883, leaving a widow, but without having given any direction as to the application of the annuity. By his will he appointed his widow his universal legatee & sole extrix. He died insolvent, & an action was brought by a creditor to administer his estate:—Held: the annuity did not form part of testator's estate, but by the articles a trust of it was created in favour of the widow, & she was entitled to it free from the claims of testator's creditors.—Re FLAVELL, MURRAY v. FLAVELL (1883), 25 Ch. Settlement—Covenant to surrender copyholds—Copyholds not surrendered.]—A will dated in 1824, & duly executed so as then to pass real estate, was held to be so far revoked by a subsequent post-nuptial settlement as that freehold & leasehold properties were declared bound by the trusts of the settlement, except that the reversion of the freeholds descended to testator's heiress-at-law.

for life, & after A.'s death to pay the purchase money in equal annual instalments to A.'s daughters. A. by his will, made some years afterwards, assumed to grant a legacy to his wife out of the real estate, directing the same to be deducted from the payments to be made to his daughters : —Held : the agreement was complete, & the proceeds of the realty could not therefore be charged.—HONSBERGER v. MARTIN, 8 Gr. 361.—CAN.

The settlement contained a covenant to surrender certain copyholds comprised in the will, to the uses of the settlement; but no surrender of them was ever made. They were held to have passed under the will.—TATHAM v. VERNON (1861), 29 Beav. 604; 4 L. T. 531; 7 Jur. N. S. 814; 9 W. R. 822; 54 E. R. 762.

134. Right to set aside transaction—Release.]—J. S., who was to have had a considerable advantage by a will, was drawn in by fraud & false suggestions, to make a composition for his interest, & to give a release; afterwards J. S. being sensible of the fraud, makes his will, & thereby, after other legacies, he devises all the rest of his goods & chattels whatsoever to his wife, upon condition that she paid all his debts, & made her sole extrix.; & it was held, that his right to set aside the release was devisable, & the words proper for that purpose.—DREW v. MERRY (1701), 1 Eq. 140. ——.]—By indentures of lease & release, dated in 1796, an estate was conveyed to A. & B. to the use of A., his heirs & assigns for ever. A. devised the estate to his daughter & to the heirs of her body, but in case she died without issue of her body at her decease, then to his nephew & his heirs for ever. In Feb. 1814, the daughter suffered a recovery of the estate, & upon her marriage, in Mar. in the same year, executed deeds of lease & release, reciting that she was seised in fee simple of the estate, & conveyed the same to trust for her & her husband & their issue, & in default of issue to such person as she should appoint. The marriage took place, & the daughter died without issue, having devised the estate in fee to her husband, who survived her:—Held: the recovery suffered by the daughter was inoperative, because at that time the legal estate for life was in B. & she was only equitable tenant for life with a legal remainder in tail, &, consequently, that her husband had no title.—IRESON v. PEARMAN (1825), 3 B. & C. 799; 5 Dow. & Ry. 145. Purchaser's interest in property under contract of sale—Contract not signed by purchaser.]—A vendor & a purchaser being in treaty for the sale & purchase of an estate, the vendor wrote to his solr., stating that the purchaser had agreed to purchase his estate for £60,000, & requested him to settle an agreement on that basis for them to sign, adding that he had given to the purchaser a copy of this letter not signed, as a memorandum. The purchaser subsequently wrote to the vendor's solr., inquiring when he would forward to him the draft of the agreement relative to the purchase he had concluded with the vendor for his estate in that county. Prior to the execution of the conveyances the purchaser made his will, by which he devised the subject-matter of the treaty to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held: at the date of his will, the purchaser had a devisable interest in the estate.—MORGAN v. HOLFORD (1852), 1 Sm. & G. 101; 20 L. 146. —— Repudiation by vendor before death of testator.]—Testator, by his will, made in 1919, devised a freehold house, therein described as "recently contracted to be purchased by me," in trust for his granddaughter as therein mentioned, & he directed that in case the purchase should not have been completed in his lifetime all purchase-money & costs & expenses incident to the completion of the purchase should be paid out of his general personal estate. Between the date of testator's will & his death in 1920, the vendors repudiated their contract to sell the house to testator on the ground that they had agreed to sell the house to testator's agent in the mistaken belief that he was acting as agent of the tenant:—Held: at the date of testator's death no enforceable contract existed between him & the vendors, & the specific devisee was not entitled to require from the residuary legatees payment of the moneys which would have been laid out in completing the purchase & paying the expenses had there been a contract binding on testator.—Re RIX, STEWARD v. LONSDALE (1921), 90 L. SUB-SECT. 9.—INSURANCE MONEYS.

147. General rule.]—(1) The Customs Annuity & Benevolent Fund was established, for the benefit of the widows, children, or other relatives of officers of the Customs, by Act of Parliament, which gave power to frame rules for its management. By the rules it was provided that the fund should be raised by subscriptions on the principle of life insurance, & should form a fund for the benefit of widows, children, relatives, & nominees of the subscribers. It was provided that the admission of a nominee by the directors should take place during the life of the subscriber; that the capital money forthcoming at a subscriber's death under his insurance should, subject to the regulations thereinafter contained, be appropriated according to the directions contained in his will or in any instrument deposited with the directors as therein mentioned; that the widow's share should not be less than one-third, or a life interest in two-thirds, & that the remainder should be applied according to the directions of the subscriber for the benefit of his widow, children, blood relations, or any of them, or his nominee or nominees who had been duly admitted by the directors; that if the widow was otherwise provided for as therein mentioned the whole money should be subject to the directions of the subscriber "in favour of his widow, children, blood relations, or nominees, or any of them as aforesaid"; that if the widow received the income of two-thirds the capital of the two-thirds should be held, subject to the directions of the subscriber, to take effect at the death of the widow, & the remaining capital, subject to the directions of the subscriber, to take effect at his own death; that if the widow was provided for as thereinbefore mentioned, or if there was no widow, then the whole capital should be "subject to the directions of the subscriber as aforesaid"; that if a subscriber died leaving issue without having by will or such other instrument as aforesaid directed the application of the capital placed at his disposal, it should go to his children & the issue of deceased children as therein mentioned, & if none, to his next of kin. A subscriber died a widower leaving children. No nominee had been accepted by the directors in his lifetime. By his will he bequeathed the fund coming from his insurance to a stranger in blood:—Held: the subscriber had no property in the fund, but only a limited power of appointment over it, & this power could only be exercised in favour of his widow, children, blood relations, & nominees admitted by the directors in his lifetime; he had therefore no power to bequeath the fund to a stranger in blood who had not in his lifetime been accepted by the directors as a nominee, & the fund therefore belonged to the children.

(2) Primâ facie, the money payable under a policy of insurance which a man effects on his own life is his own, & primâ facie he can therefore dispose of it by will. 200. Wife's paraphernalia.]—A husband is not entitled to dispose by will of his wife's paraphernalia ; but should he bequeath them, she must either abide by the will, or relinquish all benefit under it altogether.—CHURCHILL v. SMALL (1753), 3 Keny. 6 ; 96 E. R. 1288.

201. Lands held by virtue of settlement—Donee taking same interest under will as under settlement.]—By marriage settlement certain lands were limited to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, & remainder to their issue. Afterwards certain freehold land in the same parish descended to the husband in fee. There was no issue of the marriage, & the husband being in possession of the freehold lands under the settlement, & the other land of which he was seised in fee, devised to his wife for life all his freehold & copyhold lands of which he was then in the immediate possession, & also all his reversionary estate, expectant on the death of his mother, in certain other lands therein mentioned, & after the decease of his wife, he devised the same to his daughter in fee, & all other his real & personal estate he devised to his wife, her exors. & administrators :—Held : the freehold land which the husband held under the settlement, passed under the particular devise in the will to the wife for life, & after her death to his daughter in fee, although the wife would have taken the same estate in those lands under the settlement.—DOE d. A. & B. carried on business in partnership on premises belonging to the firm. A. died, having bequeathed his goodwill, not including the book debts or stock-in-trade, to pltf. The exors. assented to the bequest, but had assigned testator's interest in the trade premises to the surviving partner. To a bill by pltf. against the surviving partner to realise his share of the goodwill, a general demurrer was allowed.—ROBERTSON v. QUIDDINGTON (1860), 28 Beav. 529 ; 54 E. R. 469.

Afterwards W. representing to the Under Secretary of State that she intended to bury it in consecrated ground, obtained his licence to remove it. She caused it to be burnt in Italy, & then brought an action against the exors. for the expenses. The action was dismissed:—Held: (1) there is no property in a dead body, but the exors. have a right to the possession of the body, & their duty is to bury it; (2) a direction by will as to the disposition of testator's body cannot be enforced.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS (1882), 20 Ch. 208. ———.]—One of the judges, in giving his opinion, says that there is no capricious disposition by which, according to the law of England, a man may not leave his property. I believe that is rather too broadly laid down. It has already been shown in the argument that no man can attach any condition to his property, which is against the public good. For instance, the case put in the old books of a man making a condition that his devisee shall not cultivate his arable land. That is void, because it is against the prosperity of the country, & for no other reason. But there are many other dispositions that a man may not make of his property; & I will give a few instances. A man cannot alter the usual line of descent by a creation of his own. A man cannot give an estate in fee simple to a person & his heirs on the part of his mother. Why? Because the law has already said how a fee simple estate shall descend. This is a case in which he cannot alter it; in which the law does not allow a capricious disposition of property. A man cannot by law give an estate to a private charity; the law would not execute, it is so vague. In Townley v. Bedwell (1801), 6 Ves. 194, LORD ELDON decided against the validity of a gift for maintaining a botanic garden, upon the ground that it was stated to be intended for the public to his partnership obligations to his partner & to the claims of his creditors, & when the partnership obligations were satisfied & the claims of the creditors discharged, the shares became available for the bequest in favour of pltf.—MONROE v. MCNEIL (1904), 8 Nfld. L. R. App. 12.—NFLD.

a. Vested interest in share of residue.]—Testator appointed a legacy of £150 & a portion of the residue to be paid to J. C. or his heirs six months after his decease, & when the same was freed from a liferent:—Held: the special legacy & share of the residue vested in J. C. by his survivance of testator, & were transmissible by him by will, though he predeceased the liferentor.—COCHRANE v. COCHRANE'S EXECUTORS (1854), 17 Dunl. (Ct. of Sess.) 103; 27 Sc. Jur. 25.—SCOT.

benefit. He thought that was too large, & not within the Statute of Charitable Uses. A man cannot give his property generally to objects of liberality or to objects of benevolence, & I might multiply instances. There are many instances in which the rule admits of exception, for a man cannot indulge in every fanciful disposition of his property. The law of England, however, does this which no other law in the world accomplishes, & I hope your Lordships will, in another capacity, take care not to break wantonly & without consideration into that law. The law of England enables you at once to put your estate in settlement for the purpose of providing for those who are to come after you, &, at the same time, it gives all the rational power of disposition which any man could wish to have vested in him, & which, I believe, no other law in the world accomplishes in so perfect a manner or so well as the law of England (LORD ST. LEONARDS).—EGERTON v. BROWNLOW (EARL) (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 1; 8 State Tr. N. S. 193; 23 L. J. Ch. 348; 21 L. T. O. S. 306; 18 Jur. 71; 10 E. R. 359, H. L.

Anciently the notions were that a personal thing given to one for life, or even for a day, was a gift for ever, & would not bear a limitation over; but the construction has since been that such devise passes only the use & profits & not the thing itself, & so it is made good that way. But in this case even the use & profits are denied to pass notwithstanding what has been urged by the other side; & it is the stronger because the word (produce) is left out in the limitation over, which shows a variation of the intention; & to make the rents & profits of an estate to go over, there ought to be very express words (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—TISSEN v. TISSEN (1718), 1 P. It is to be observed that this is not an absolute gift of these articles but a limited interest, viz. for life; consequently it is naturally to be supposed not to include any articles which are consumed by their very use; at least words are not to be extended to such articles, unless they clearly embrace them (LORD ALVANLEY, M.R.).—PORTER v. TOURNAY (1797), 3 Ves. 311; 30 E. A.; but should she marry, then my will & mind is, that my exors. shall pay her £100 per annum, for her own use, during her natural life, out of the rents & profits of my said estate." an inventory should be made & taken of his personal estate, & that two copies thereof should be made, one to be delivered to his wife, & the other to be signed by her & kept by his exors.: but testator gave no directions as to any valuation of his personal estate, or any part thereof. Testator, in case his wife should marry again, bequeathed all & singular his personal estate & effects in trust for certain legatees, as therein mentioned. After testator's death an inventory of his personal estate generally was made for the purposes of probate duty, but no inventory was made & signed as directed by the will. Testator died in 1853, & the widow married again in 1857, whereupon the legatees in remainder claimed that the widow & her husband might be charged with the value of certain articles included in the inventory above mentioned, viz. "growing turnips & roots, fallows labour, seeds & manure: layers: manure made, & not carried out on the farm: wheat, barley, beans, & peas, & straw & haulm severed from the ground: oxen, sheep, pigs, & horses": —Held: as testator had not directed a valuation, the established rule of the ct. must prevail, viz. that articles quae ipso usu consumuntur, & which in this case were necessarily employed on the farm in order to maintain the course of husbandry, did not pass to the legatees in remainder.—BRYANT v. EASTERSON (1859), 32 L. 265. Necessity for conversion into permanent securities.]—General rule, that, where personal property is bequeathed for life with remainders over, & not specifically, it is to be converted into the 3 per cents., subject in the case of a real security to an inquiry, whether it will be for the benefit of all parties ; & the tenant for life is entitled only upon that principle.—HOWE v. DARTMOUTH (EARL), HOWE v. AYLESBURY (1802), 7 Ves. 137 ; 32 E. 266. ——.]—When testator limits his residuary property to one for life, with remainders over, it is primâ facie to be intended that testator means that the property which is given to the tenant for life is to pass to those entitled in remainder ; & if any part of the property be of a wasting nature, as long annuities or leasehold, it must be immediately sold & converted into permanent property, unless upon the whole context of the will it shall appear that testator had not that intention

Testator gave the residue of his estate, real & personal, to his exors. upon trust, to permit his wife to receive the rents, profits, & annual proceeds thereof to her sole use during her life, & after her decease upon trust to sell his freehold house in Oxford Street, & also his leasehold houses, by auction ; & testator desired that E. should be employed as auctioneer to convert the whole of his estate into money for the purposes therein mentioned :—Held : the widow was entitled to enjoy for her life the income of testator's long annuities.—ALCOCK v. SLOPER (1833), 2 My. & K. 699 ; 39 E. 275. ——.]—Testator appointed his wife & two others exors. & trustees ; directed his business & a leasehold house to be sold, & gave the residue, which was principally leasehold property, to his wife, directing that if she married again it should be settled to her separate use for life, then he bequeathed the house "if not sold, & the money settled as above stated & all money, etc., so settled upon her for her lifetime," to certain other persons ; but if his wife should not marry again he left the property to her own disposal at her death.

The widow married again two years after testator's death ; the leaseholds were not converted, & she received the entire income till her death, twenty-nine years afterwards by which time the greater portion of the terms of years had run out. Her second husband, who survived his wife & her co-trustees, never acted in the trust :—Held: the leaseholds ought to have been converted upon the widow's second marriage.—Re SMITH'S ESTATE, CLIFFORD v. WASHINGTON (1879), 48 L. J. Ch. 205 ; 40 L. T. 389.

276. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate to his exors., upon trust to permit his wife to receive & take the rents, issues, profits & annual income thereof for her sole & separate use during her life, & after her death testator declared that the trustees of his will should hold all his residuary estate & the investments or income thereof in trust for his nephew absolutely. There was no trust for conversion & no investment clause. Part of the estate consisted of stocks in a gas co. The question was raised whether the gas stock should be sold, & the proceeds invested in New Consols ; & whether testator's widow was entitled to retain the whole of the income of testator's estate which she had actually received & any accruing income of the gas stock :—Held: the tenant for life under a will could not take in specie the income of property which was of a perishable or wasting nature.—Re EATON, DAINES v. EATON (1894), 70 L. 277. —— Bank stock.]—Testator gave all his freehold & leasehold messuages, lands & hereditaments, ready money, securities for money, stock in the public funds, goods, chattels & effects, & all other his real & personal estate & effects, to trustees, in trust to pay the rents of his freehold & leasehold estates, & the dividends, interest & proceeds of his money in the funds & other his personal estate, to his daughter for life, &, after her death, to stand possessed of his freehold & leasehold estates, money in the funds, & all other his real & personal estate, for the children of his daughter, &, in default of such children, in trust to pay the rents of his freehold & leasehold estates, & the dividends, interest & proceeds of his stock in the funds & other his personal estate, to his nephews, for their lives, &, after their deaths, in trust to stand possessed of his freehold & leasehold estates. Money in the funds & other his personal estate, for their children ; &, in default of such children, he gave his freehold & leasehold estates, stock in the public funds & all other his real & personal estate, to the corpn. of S. in trust as soon as conveniently might be after they should come into possession thereof, to sell his freehold & leasehold estates, & also to sell, call in & convert into money his stocks in the public funds & all other his said personal estate, & to lend the same to certain persons upon the terms therein mentioned. Testator, at the date of his will & at his death, was possessed of leasehold estates, turnpike securities, bank stock, & other personal estate :—Held : the bequest to the trustees was a general residuary bequest, & the leaseholds & bank stock ought to be sold, & the proceeds invested in 3 per cents. ; & an inquiry was directed, whether the turnpike securities were real, & permanent securities.—MILLS v. MILLS (1835), 7 Sim. 501 ; 4 L. 294. —— Disposition of residuary personal estate—To be enjoyed in succession.]—The rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), No. 265, ante, does not apply in the case of a settlement by deed, & apparently only applies where there is a disposition by will of residuary personal estate given as one fund to be enjoyed by several persons in succession.—Re VAN STRAUBENZEE, BOUSTEAD v. COOPER, [1901] 2 Ch. 779; 70 L. Accordingly, where under the will of testator unauthorised investments are retained under a power to postpone conversion, the rule laid down in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), No. 265, ante, still remains applicable in regard to the income payable to a tenant for life.—Re TROLLOPE'S WILL TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. TROLLOPE, [1927] 1 Ch. 596; 96 L. He bequeathed his residuary estate to his trustees upon trust to convert & invest the proceeds & to pay the income of his residuary trust estate to his wife during her widowhood, & after her death or remarriage upon certain trusts. Testator died in May, 1913, & the trustees decided to carry on the business for a time, but did not employ any further capital in the business. The widow died in Aug. 1914. The farm consisted of between 700 & 800 acres, & was valued at testator's death at £4,746 4*s*. iii. What amounts to Indication of Intention.

316. Small indication sufficient.]—(1) The rule laid down in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), No. 265, ante, is, that where property of a perishable nature is given to be enjoyed in succession, the object of testator can only be effected by converting into permanent annuities, & giving each person, in succession, the dividends of the fund. This rule prevails, unless there can be gathered from the will some expression of intention that the property is to be enjoyed in specie, & which it is incumbent on those contesting the application of the rule to point out.

Modern cases allow small indications of intention to prevent the application of the rule; but the mere absence of any direction to convert is insufficient.

(2) Testator bequeathed all his money, securities for money, money in the funds, household furniture, cattle, & all other his personal estate & effects unto two trustees, upon trust to pay his debts & legacies, & subject to the payment of a legacy, to stand possessed upon the trusts after mentioned. He then devised his freehold estates to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to reside at his house, & to use the household furniture, plate, linen, & china therein for her life, & to "pay the rents & profits of his real estate," & "the interest dividends, & proceeds to arise from his money, & securities for money, money in the funds, & personal estate thereinbefore bequeathed" to her for life, &, after her decease, to sell his real estate, & divide & pay the purchase-moneys; "& pay, assign, or transfer his money & securities for money, money in the funds, & personal estate" unto his children. Testator possessed long annuities & leaseholds:—Held: they ought to be converted into 3 per cents. & the widow was merely entitled to the dividends thereon.—MORGAN v. MORGAN (1851), 14 Beav. 72; 51 E. 318. Property specifically designated.]—Testatrix, having £115 long annuities standing in her name at her death, of which £65 like annuities had been purchased for her by T. B., bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees, to be invested or continued by them in the public funds or at interest, the stocks, funds or securities to be varied at discretion, in trust to pay certain annuities out of the interest, dividends, etc., &, subject thereto, to pay the income of the said trust moneys, stocks, funds & securities, to S. N. for life; &, subject thereto, she gave all the residue of her estate to the trustees absolutely. By a codicil she gave all the money funded by T. B. in her name in the long annuities, which she mentioned to be £50 per annum, to C. D. after S. N.'s death:—Held: £50 of the long annuities were specifically bequeathed to C. D.—D'AGLIE v. FRYER (1841), 12 Sim. 1; 59 E. R. 1030; affd., 12 Sim. 328, n., L. C.

319. ——.]—Testator began his will by bequeathing the whole of his property to his wife for life, & afterwards to be equally divided between his children. He then gave to each of his children & to his wife some pecuniary & specific legacies, & afterwards bequeathed as follows: "The property, my house, 21, North Street, St. Marylebone, let on lease at £48 a year, £1,000 new 4 per cents., £1,500 in the 2 per cent. Consols, £645 in the threes reduced, & £20 per annum in the long annuities, all this I give to my wife, with the residue & interest, should there be any":—Held: the widow took a life interest only in the general residue, including the particulars enumerated in the concluding clause, but of those particulars she was entitled to the enjoyment in specie.—VAUGHAN v. BUCK (1841), 1 Ph. 75; 6 Jur. 23; 41 E. R. 559, L. C.; subsequent proceedings (1843), 13 Sim. 404.

320. —— Property in public funds.]—Testator gave all interest & dividends of all such stock as he might have in the public funds to one for life, & gave "the principal money so invested" to others in remainder; he possessed a sum of £220 long annuities at his death:—Held: a specific gift of the long annuities for life; & the parties in remainder were not entitled to have the long annuities converted, & the produce invested for their benefit, in a fund which was not perishable.—WALKER v. TILLOTT (1835), 4 L. J. Ch. 232.

321. ——.]—Testator having 3½ per cents. East India stock, Danish bonds, & other property, bequeathed to his wife, during her widowhood, the interest of all the money he had or might possess in the funds or other securities, "& I further bequeath, to my wife, the interest of any other property I do or may possess, to be enjoyed by her so long as she remains single":—Held: testator's widow was entitled, as against the residuary legatees, to enjoy, in specie, every portion of her husband's property which came within the description of money in the funds or other property, & consequently, his 3½ per cents. East India stock & Danish bonds.—OAKES v. STRACHEY (1843), 13 Sim. 414; 7 Jur. 433; 60 E. R. 160.

322. ——.]—Testator willed that his wife should receive the interest of "all the property I possess in the public funds, for her life":—Held: the wife was entitled to receive the income of all the property which testator had in the funds at the date of his will, & in its then state of investment, notwithstanding it consisted of long annuities.—COCKRAN v. COCKRAN (1844), 14 Sim. 248; 4 L. 323. —— Property in bank & India stock.]—Testatrix gave her property, with certain exceptions, to her granddaughter, & afterwards stated "that her property was in the Bank & India House":—Held: she was entitled to enjoy the Bank & India stock in specie, & it was not liable to be converted into consols.—HUBBARD v. YOUNG (1847), 10 Beav. 203; 16 L. J. Ch. 182; 9 L. T. O. S. 263; 11 Jur. 177; 50 E. R. 560.

324. Power to trustees to apply rents after death of life tenant—In maintenance of remainderman.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate & effects to trustees, to permit the rents, interest & annual proceeds to be received by A. for life, & after his decease to C. & D. when they attained twenty-one, with power after the death of A. to apply the rents, etc., towards the maintenance of C. & D. until their shares should become vested. Part of the residue consisted of leaseholds:—Held: the tenant for life was entitled to enjoy them in specie, & they were not to be converted for the benefit of those in remainder.—GOODENOUGH v. TREMAMONDO (1840), 2 Beav. 512; 48 E. R. 1280.

325. Power to tenant for life to retain sum—For renewal of leases.]—Testator gave his widow "the full & entire enjoyment" of his real & personal estates, which, after her death, he gave to other persons; & he empowered her to retain a portion of a sum of £150 a year given to other parties, for renewing the leaseholds:—Held: she was entitled to enjoy the leasehold in specie, it was not imperative on her to renew, but she had acted wrongly in surrendering a lease, of which she was the only cestui que vie, as she thereby deprived herself of the option of renewing for the benefit of the parties in remainder.—HARVEY v. HARVEY (1842), 5 Beav. 134; 49 E. R. 528.

326. Direction for sale with realty—On happening of specified event.]—The fair conclusion to be drawn from the will is that there was to be no sale or conversion either of the real or leasehold property thus given together, before the event which is there mentioned & that, at that time & not before that time, both species of property were to be sold together. My impression, therefore, is . . . that there is an expression of intention that the leasehold property should be enjoyed in specie (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.C.).—DANIEL v. WARREN (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 290; 7 Jur. 462; 63 E. R. 127.

327. Direction to trustees to retain percentage of rents.]—A direction to sell particular parts of testator's personal estate is not of much weight on the question of the conversion of the residue; for the rule as to conversion does not proceed on the presumed existence of a definite intention that the property shall be converted, but upon the expressed intention that the legatees shall enjoy the property in succession.

The direction, that the trustees should retain a percentage on the rents to be collected, fortified by other expressions in the will, regarded as evidence that testator contemplated the enjoyment of the leasehold property in specie by the legatees. —CAFE v. BENT (1845), 5 Hare, 24; 67 E. 329. Direction to divide on death of tenant for life.]—Residuary devise & bequest on trust to pay the dividends, interest, & annual produce of testator's real & personal estates to the separate use of his daughter or daughters for life, & after her or their decease, to pay, transfer, & equally divide the whole of his real & personal estate among the issue of his daughter or daughters; & for want of such issue to pay certain legacies, & to sell the residue of the real & personal estate not consisting of money:—Held: to entitle the tenant for life to the enjoyment of the personalty in specie. —HUNT v. SCOTT (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 219; 63 E.
